UPC sponsors afternoon panel in recognition of AIDS Day

BY DANA STRONGIN

Kannay State Collomia

The K-State Student Union Courtyard became a place to learn, question and remember early Thursday afternoon. World AIDS Day is Saturday and the Union Program Council sponsored a lunchtime panel to honor it.

The panel included a man who is HIV-positive and local community members who work to educate and to help those who have been diagnosed with the disease.

Bret Turner, a Kansas resident who has been HIV-positive for eight years, was the first to speak. He began with a discussion of the theme for this year's World AIDS Day, which is, "I Care - Do You?" He said he is focused on teaching people about HIV and AIDS.

"Sometimes I think it is an uphill battle to educate people," he said. "By asking questions, we can find others to make a group of people who care, and the group will grow from there."

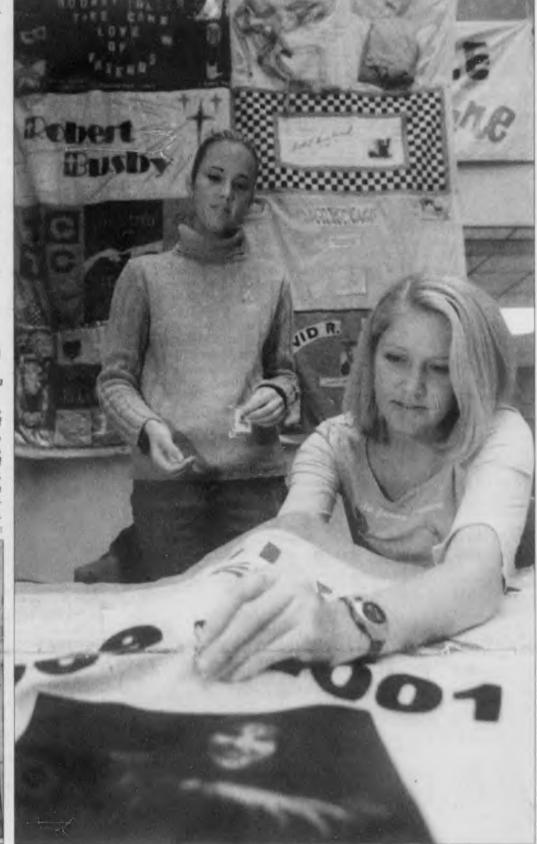

Turner said he is especially concerned with the education of youth because he said current preventative measures are not working. Ten million people 15 to 24 years old contract HIV each year, he said.

This means that if I talk for 10 minutes, 50 more young people will

Military prepares for future missions

BY ROBERT BURNS

The Assessment Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The American commander of the war in Afghanistan is assembling a mix of ground forces and air power to fit the most difficult and dangerous phase of the military campaign: rooting out Taliban and af-Qaeda terrorist leaders from caves, tunnels and other fortified hide-outs.

No decision has been made to commit U.S. ground troops to the mission, but Gen. Tommy Franks has made clear he will move forces closer to the key targets in case opposition forces cannot finish the job.

About 1,000 Mannes now are established at a remote airfield in southern Afghanistan, and at least several dozen regular Army troops from the 10th Mountain Division have moved into northern areas. Pentagon officials said Thursday that Franks is considering sending additional attack planes to the region, while at least two airfields in northern Afghanistan are being repaired for possible U.S. use.

A senior defense official said Thursday that the government of Kyrgyzstan has given Franks conditional approval to base U.S. aircraft at an air base in that former Soviet republic, which lies to the north of Afghanistan and Tajikistan.

Franks must provide details, such as the numbers and kinds of aircraft, and the expected length of their deployment. before Kyrgyzstan will give final approval. The official said Franks has not decided those details and has yet to make a formal

Most of the U.S. planes attacking targets in Afghanistan are flying from aircraft carriers in the Arabian Sea or from land bases in the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean. Some Air Force special operations helicopters are based in Uzbekistan, Small numbers of U.S. forces are in Pakistan.

With only small pockets of Taliban resistance remaining in northern Afghanistan, the focus is on Kandahar. the southern city that gave birth to the Taliban militia movement. Franks wants to tighten the squeeze on Kandahar with selective U.S. bombing and growing pressure from anti-Taliban forces. The chief leadership target there is Mullah Mohammed Omar, the Taliban supreme leader.

U.S. special operations forces are working with opposition commanders in the south in an effort to improve the coordination of their attacks, which so far have made little progress against the Taliban in Kandahar, officials said Thursday.

Rear Adm. John Stufflebeem said the Taliban military is now fractured, with little capability to coordinate or commu-

Donations to hospice program pay homage to deceased loved ones

Alice and Leon Edmunds have moved on with their lives, but they haven't forgotten.

Though they have remarried, the couple spent Wednesday night honoring their first spouses at the Homecare & Hospice Foundation's Light of Life dedication

"This is such a special thing," Alice Edmunds said. "I've been involved every since they started the program, because it's something I think is important."

The campaign, which is in its eighth year, allows people to make donations to the foundation. For their donation, residents are able to place ornaments on the poinsettia tree at the Manhattan Town Center, Each ornament is inscribed with the name of a family member or friend who has died.

A $100 contribution places an angel, $50 a star and $20 a places a dove on the tree. Residents who attended the dedication ceremony Wednesday night placed their ornaments on the tree. New ornaments, though, will be added about twice each week.

The list beside the tree, which lists the names of those honored one the tree is also updated each time ornaments are added.

Vera Hintz, executive director, said the campaign is an opportunity for people to honor the memories of loved ones who have died and helps support the foundation's work with clients and the community.

"This helps to make the community more aware of our work and the money it takes us to operate, since we are a non-profit organization," Hintz said. "It is also a visual way for people to remember loved ones. That's important in this time of the year." However. Hintz said the campaign is a community project and not limited to client families

"Our program is important to the community so its important that we are able to raise donations with this campaign so we can continue our quality care," Hintz said.

Hintz said the Light of Life campaign usually raises about $18,000 each year, which is essential to continue operations.

Nancy Barnaby, hospice nurse, said the funding for the hospice program is important so that they can continue their work.

Homecare & Hospice allows terminally ill patients remain in their homes with their friends and families.

"Our clients want their loved ones to be with them, in a familiar environment." Barnaby said. "It allows lets them preserve their dignity and independence. Edmunds said said she stays involved with the Light of Life campaign every year, because the holidays are an important time for her to honor his first husband's memory. She also said people everyone who has had a loved one die understand the importance of such memories during this time of year.

"In the spirit of Christmas, I think it is important to recognize those who have died." Edmunds said. "This is our way of saying we haven't forgotten them, and we never will."

Zach Long/Collegian

Alice and Leon Edmunds sit in front of the tree of life while listening to Christmas music Wednesday evening at the Manhattan Town Center. The two come to the tree every year to honor their first spouses.

Winter Dance will be at 8 tonight in Nichols Theatre. Tickets are $10 for the general public and $6 for students.

Charitable Chili cook-off seeking food donations

Joe's Tap Room will have its thirdannual Chili Cook-Off on Saturday.

From 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. loe's Tap Room will be giving away free bowls of chili to anyone who brings in foud donations for the Flint Hills Bread

"We have a hig batch of chili that we give away, and we also judge other chili made by people entered in our contest," said Terry Wark, general manager of fae's Tap Room. "If people want to taste the chili that we are judging, they can do that, too,"

Wark said that normally, people from the restaurant industry in Aggieville enter in the cook-off.

We usually have 15 to 25 entries.

The cook-off was started four years ago at Tubbie's, a former Aggieville bar. The contest was moved to Joe's Tap Room a year later.

"We'd heard of this kind of thing before and thought it sounded like a good idea," Wark said. "We decided to include the Flint Hill's Breadbasker, so it was more worthwhile."

Wark said the cook-off raised more than 100 pounds of food last year.

"Our goal is to get over 150 pounds this year." Wark said. "We'd always like to get more than the year

House bill prevents future financial terrorism losses

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The House passed legislation Thursday to help the insurance industry cover the cost of claims from any future terrorist attacks. Passage came amid a partisan dispute over restrictions on personal lawsuits seeking damages.

The vote was 227-193, mostly along party lines, as Democrats withdrew their earlier support after restrictions on terrorism-related litigation were added to the bill. The changes clouded prospects for agreement with the Senate on compromise legislation.

The bill would commit the government, for at least a year, to covering 90 percent of losses from another large terror attack; insurance companies would pay the rest. The measure would require insurers to reimburse the government for the

ASK THE FINANCIAL PLANNERS

Dear Financial Planners,

About three weeks ago I responded to an advertisement for a job placement service. I called the toll-free number, and a representative named Tim said that in order to verify my student status and to begin processing my application, he would need my Social Security number and my bank account number, I gave him this information and have not heard from him since. Now that I have had time to think about it, I'm worried. Please let me know if I should be concerned

Dear Student,

Our guess is that this job placement service is really a scam. We recommend you check your bank account records very carefully to see if a withdrawai was made from your account. Legitimate job placement firms will never ask for a bank account number. There is no plausible reason a firm would need this information.

We also are skeptical of firms or individuals who want you to disclose your Social Security number over the phone. Legitimate firms will follow up phone conversations with a letter and an employment application. Your best strategy in the future is to be skeptical of anyone or any firm that asks for personal information over the phone another concern Turner has. He said he wanted the audience to remember there is a person attached to the

"'H' is for human," he said. "The disease is as individual as the person that has it. The way each person dies from, deals with and treats the disease is different for each person."

As he spoke, Turner explained the difficulty of talking to other people about AIDS.

"There is a fine line I have to walk," he said. "I wanted to show how bad it is, but also that it is not the end of the world. You can live with it, but it is not easy."

Turner said he would like people to look at his Web site, www.misfitslife.com, for more information about his life, the virus and practicing safe sex.

It is important to keep up with recommendations for safer sex. Turner said, because they change. He said suggestions now are better than they were when he contracted HIV.

"I was practicing the guidelines I was taught," he said, "but they have changed since then."

Other panelists discussed their work to increase awareness and understanding of HIV and AIDS. Victor Force, executive director of the AIDS Regional Project, which coordinates programs to inform specific groups. The project began in 1993 as the Manhattan AIDS Project and has

"There still needs to be progress so the stigmas fall away," Force said. "People don't want to talk about AIDS because we don't like to talk about sex, especially diseases getting passed on."

Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, said he agrees the lifestyles associated with AIDS affect the way people view the disease. He said most religions have statements stating that homosexuality is wrong on some level.

Fallon read a letter by a minister who spent 30 years hiding his homosexuality. He also hid his disease for seven years. The man described his shame, pain and illnesses as a dark and lonely journey.

K-State students have concerns about their sexuality because of issues such as AIDS, said Dori Lambert, a therapist with University Counseling Services.

"Students became concerned about their sexual activity and behavior when awareness about HIV came on the scene," she said.

Sharrel Johnson works with Force on the AIDS Regional Project, and specializes in educating African-American women.

"I go out to their communities and speak with them." she said. "Often, men will go have sex with women in other communities and come home and expose their wives and girlfriends to HIV. These women are afraid to get tested because they worry about who will take care of their children."

Stacey Broughman, a registered nurse who works as an HIV case manager for the Riley County Health Department, spoke about her work. She said she had never planned to work with AIDS patients.

"It was not my main cause in life," she said. 'I started it because it was a day shift, which is rare in nursing. Now, I could not imagine working with any other group of people.

"I have never worked with a more grateful, wonderful, friendly clientele in my life," Broughman said. "It gives me so much satisfaction in my life."

REGAINING VISION

Americans must ask questions of selves to prevent terrorism n the slippery slope, I must not be very patriotic. Patriotism now seems to equate with blind support for military campaigns in the name of ending terrorism across the globe. I don't equate myself with that line of thinking, I see myself realizing a different vision. I want the government to know there are people out here who do not want all-out revenge and secret military trials in the wake of mourning.

I believe the only way we can put a permanent end to terrorism is to stop participating in it. I believe we should explore not who we should bomb or where we should bomb, but why we were targeted. There are improvements we can make, if we only could see the world's perspective of our nation. Our constructive vision has been robbed by the, eye for an eye, justice mentality.

Zac Cook

Regaining our vision will be a painful process. To reinstall the precious gift of sight to our nation, we must promise to embrace the free exchange of ideas. We must realize that we are not always correct. We must not meet hate with more hate.

Does an act such as Sept. 11 justify a bloody response? Our knee jerk reaction screams, "yes," Americans are accustomed to the death penalty. Kill and you will be killed. An eye for an eye.

I believe America can be better than the undisciplined acting upon vindictive rage. Why would this action be taken against our country? There are many reasons, none of them are remedied by our current actions: Because our democracy has a sense of pride, it will act without proper restraint, in essence selfdestructing to the value it is trying to promote.

I would like to see America stop bullying the world with our customs. It would be nice if we would respect principles of sovereignty rather than overthrowing every little country which tries to defy us. Leave the map-drawing to Rand McNally.

How will we open our eyes to regain the vision? Opening eyes requires changing public sentiment. Should we all follow Texan customs of vigilant justice? The world doesn't think so. President Bush's support from our European allies already is threatened by his extensive use of the death penalty as Governor of Texas. But, the American public continues to support the Texan customs. Our rewards are offered: "Wanted, Dead or Alive." The public seems to be napping, eyes wide shut.

If the President says "We'll bomb Iraq" the public supports it. It can be deemed a just war. We are simply just going after another terrorist with weapons of mass destruction. Blindly, we will support the Saddam Hussein hunt.

If, then, we are justifying the cause, has the effect not been warranted for quite some time? The same > leaders pressing for bombing are the same ones whose vision failed at shaking up Saddam 10 years ago. An exclusive air war didn't prove to be the solution then, and it still wouldn't today.

> Why won't the public support a ground war? Because ground war might cause American casualties. However, if a cause was just, wouldn't a ground war show that we really back the 'just' cause? Mainstream media has gripped the country and pulled it into a cauldron of of revenge and hate. If each individual had to support war casualties, would the war be justifiable? The media has set the social norm to be a irrational, retaliatory attitude. Pull everyone away from the TV, Internet, radio and print media for a while. Would everyone go and fight the war if they personally were called? If we had a national draft, eyes would be opened. If each person were called to serve, the public might question policy decisions. If each person were a part of the retaliation force, open eyes would begin to see new questions. Those are the questions that need to be asked.

On Monday, Matt Killingsworth echoed the sentiment, "Is there never a time to question government policy? When did limiting free speech become socially acceptable? Do we limit free speech to only a discussion of things we want to hear?

Lately, the public has limited free speech not by censoring, but by ignoring. The public feels it doesn't want to hear and flips the channel to something more patriotic. The government will not offer alternatives.

Instead, it will stick to the adage, "you either are one of us or one of them." The public needs to

With clear sight, the public should be able to act upon the essence of democracy - that being constructive disagreement - and exercise the freedom of offering a different viewpoint without feeling unpatriotic. Patriotism is not blind confor-

Holidays bring back memories of high school days, need for families

I usually get a little nostalgic around the holidays. Sometimes I yearn for the good of days.

It seems strange to think I graduated from high school only three years ago. To me, it feels more like three decades since I walked across the stage in my cap and gown to receive my high school diploma.

I remember my senior year pretty well. The promise of freedom and independence became visible on the ever nearing horizon. I couldn't wait to get out on my own and experience "the real world (I actually thought college was the real in high school). A world without parental nagging (or reminders, as my dad would say) and no curfew seemed like heaven. I was

Some people say you change the most in high school. I don't think that's true. I think we change the most in college.

I've seen students who were spoiled brats in high school and couldn't do a thing for themselves become responsible adults. I've also seen people who probably would have been voted most likely to succeed in their high school classes, choose to party and skip class only to be put on academic probation and struggle with their studies.

Through all of the changes we undergo in college trying to find our true selves, there is one thing that remains constant. Our families.

They were there for us from the start and they're still there, although it's sometimes easy to forget them.

It seems like the longer I'm in college, the busier I get. My classes are more demanding. and I'm in organizations I forgot I even joined. 1 feel like I have to schedule time just to relax year, I used to go home every weekend there wasn't a home football game. This semester, I've been home twice. Meetings, classes, activities and friends have kept me at school more than they did before. It's now that I miss my family the most.

I never thought I would say this, but I kind of miss my dad's

> I miss having my family around to tell me things would be OK, no matter how bad they might seem now.

That's one of the greatest things about family. They always will be there for you. Whether you flunk that test or ace it, your family is still going to love you. Sure, it might not make them happy if you fail your test, but it isn't going to change the way they feel about

It can be scary trying to figure out who you are. At times, I feel like I'm all alone, trying to figure things out when I don't have a clue what's going on.

That's when I pick up the phone and call my dad. I know he's been through what I'm going through now. I know no matter how much I think I've screwed things up. I always can count on my family to back me up.

I think it must be that whole unconditional love thing. Your parents really don't have a choice but to love you. I'm thankful for that.

With the holidays approaching, now is the perfect time to let our families know how much we still need them and love them. Most of us probably don't say it enough.

The best gift you could give your family over the holidays is the one that doesn't cost a thing. Tell them you care. Let them know that having them in your life is the best gift of all.

Next Door remains only smoke-free bar in 'Ville

More than a year after Aggieville's only non-smoking bar opened, owner Rusty Wilson said the response has been fair.

"There's not much of a demand for non-smoking bars here," he said. "Alcohol and cigarettes just go hand in hand a lot of the time."

Wilson, who owns Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, said Next Door usually is full Thursdays and Fridays. The rest of the week. it is pretty empty, he said.

But Wilson said he has no plans to lift the smoking ban. It fills a niche that needs to be filled.

"It's a bar that the family-type person will go to," he said. "I hear nothing but good things about it."

Aggieville Business Association Director Cheryl Sieben said she

"From my personal observations and people I know, it's been very popular," she said. "It's very positive for the community."

Next Door opened in July 2000 after former Student Body President Jason Heinrich visited California, where smoking had been banned in all restaurants and bars. He introduced the proposal to Student Senate, which then passed a resolution asking the Manhattan City Commission to examine a non-smoking ordinance.

The city did not pass an ordinance, but Wilson decided to test out a non-smoking bar. "It's done well." he said.

Patrons enjoy Saturday night at Rustys Next Door. The establishment is owned by Rustys Last Chance and has a nonsmoking atmosphere.

He said the bar often is rented out for private parties, and it's especially busy on gameweekends. Lacey Martin, junior in family life and community services, visits Next Door about once a week. She doesn't smoke and said she likes the atmosphere. "I don't mind it as much when I'm there, but when I leave the bar and I reek, I hate that," she said. Martin said the bar usually is pretty crowded on weekends. That might be because more non-smokers are more likely to go out on weekends. Wilson said. On weekdays, the people who go out are more likely to be heavy partiers who smoke. That's why Next Door often remains locked during the week.

For now, Next Door is the only non-smoking bar in Manhattan. Wilson said he has not heard of any other bars considering smoking bans.

"I'm the only one on that bandwagon," he said.

Wade Phillips, owner of Gilligan's, estimated that 25 to 30 percent of the bar's patrons

He said he would lose too much business by making the bar non-smoking. But if Gilligan's were split into sections, like Rusty's, Phillips said he would consider it.

Still. Sieben said she is pleased that one bar is able to cater to a different market. "You make a choice when you go it," she said.

"But a lot of people prefer to not be around smoke. It's another venue for the community and nor

Latin hat dance ends International Week

BY RYAN DONAHUE

The beat and rhythm of traditional Latin music set the stage for a performance of Mexican hat dancing Thursday night.

Anna Alcantara, junior in elementary education, performed for an audience of international and local Jandine Terrace Apartment residents during the evening talent show.

Dressed in traditional garb, called a jalisco, Alcantara danced for the final event of the Jardine International appreciation week.

"I was born with the passion of dancing. My mother used to play music when I was a little girl, and I would cry when she stopped the music," Alcantara said.

Events at the apartment complex have taken place nightly during the past week.

"We wanted a week to share international cultures. Our goal was to share in all of our diversity," said Kevin Wanklyn, assistant coordinator for lardine.

Stephanie Bannister, assistant director for the Department of Housing and Dinning Services, is in charge of the fardine complex. Bannister said she believes the event was good for the Jardine community.

"This is our contribution to a national program called international family week," Bannister said. "We try to do programs to celebrate families and cultures.

The event-also showcased a cooking night Tuesday and a language night Wednesday. All events were free and open to all.

"We had a pretty good turnout for all the events. We had almost 30 people here for the cooking night. We made all this different food and got to taste it. Later, we put together a cookbook out of the recipes," Wanklyn said.

Alcantara was one of three acts that performed at the Thomas J. Frith Community Center during the talent show. Other acts included a group sing-along lead by Todd Fertig. senior in elementary education, and a display of Chinese martial arts by Jardine resident Wenssan Yang.

VOLLEYBALL IN BRIEF

Mimick cleared of criminal charges, will play this weekend

Lisa Mimick, a senior outside hitter for the Wildcat volleyball team, was cleared of all charges stemming from Sunday's arrest for domestic battery, Tom Gilbert, assistant sports information director. announced Thursday.

Mimick, a first-team All-Big 12 and All-Big 12 Academic team selection for head coach Suzie Fritz's team, was arrested at 3:45 a.m. Sunday by Riley County Police Department officers at her residence.

The senior, who will play against Arkansas in the Wildcats' first round contest today, started in all but one of the team's 26 matches during the season and became only the sixth player in school history to finish her career with at least 1,000 digs.

Parking shuttle available for patrons of NCAA tournament

Fans won't have to fight for a parking spot in order to see Friday's first-round NCAA tournament action.

Due to a limited amount of parking spaces at Ahearn Field House, a free shuttle service running from KSU Stadium to the west side of Ahearn will be available to fans from 2 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Patrons may park on the east side of the football stadium (the side opposite the press box), and the shuttle will take them to Ahearn.

No shuttle service will be offered for Saturday's game.

Wildcats sign prep standout to national letter of intent for '02

Although her roster is set for this weekend's opening rounds of the NCAA Tournament, K-State head coach Suzie Fritz added another name to next year's Joy Hamlin, a four-year starter at Winfield (Kan.) High School, has signed a national letter of intent to play for the Wildcats beginning in 2002, K-State Sports Information announced Wednesday.

"Joy is just starting to realize her potential as a volleyball player." Fritzsaid. "She has all the physical and emotional gifts to become a great player at this level."

Hamlin, a two-year all-Ark Valley League first team selection, will be one of many players Fritz will be looking to develop quickly in order to fill the vacancies left by departing starting seniors in Jayne Christen, Lisa Mimick and Liz Wegner.

Hamlin chose K-State over several other schools, including the Wildcats' first round opponent - Arkansas, as well as Arkansas State, Nebraska and Ohio

Senior outside hitter Liz Wegner and Junior outside hitter Jennifer Pollard have packed a powerful punch this season for K-State. Both players will be looking for solid play at 7:30 tonight against Arkansas as the Cats open NCAA Tournament play at Ahearn Field House.

Pollard becomes extra scoring threat for Wildcats

In K-State volleyball's spring workouts last season, Lisa Mimick went down with a broken right foot.

With Mimick projected to miss 10 weeks of action, the Wildcats were short a starting outside hitter.

Enter sophomore lennifer Pollard. In Mimick's 8-match absence, all Pollard did as a starter was lead the Cats in kills twice and turn in team-tops in digs five times.

Pollard continued this success with Mimick's return and finished the 2000 season second on the team in total digs and fifth in total kills.

Now a junior, Pollard continues to impress in 2001, third in kills and second in digs for the No. 18 Wildcats. Head coach Suzie Fritz said Pollard is an asset to the team who may not always get the recognition she deserves. "She doesn't get all the hype," Fritz said. "But she doesn't make errors and she gives you a consistent performance and she is just an immeasurable member of this volleyball team." Being part of any team means eventually stepping into a leadership role. As K-State's lone junior in 2001, Pollard played a significant role in the development of the Cats' younger players. Pollard said a big part of leadership lies in a focused mentality. "A lot of what I have worked on here is the mental side of volleyball," Pollard said. "You have to be relentlessly positive. If you can do that, it rubs off on everybody else, and nobody really gets down or too hard on themselves.

Though a leader herself now, Pollard has had the benefit of learning the game from a talented cast of players in her three years at K-State - seniors Jayne Christen, Mimick and Liz Wegner, to Pollard said the trio of seniors has been instrumental in her ability to perform at a high level.

Every day in practice they are there for you, and in the games too," Pollard said. "You learn from them telling you what to do but you also learn from watching them play.

They have been around the block, and you respect them for that. They are "In order to learn about the abilities of the players around you, it is a good idea to get them the volleyball and that means good passing.

Pollard said passing is the strongest aspect of her personal game.

I put a lot of pride in my passing." Pollard said. "It contributes to everyone's success."

"If I am passing, then it gets the middle hitters going and that gets the

"Passing gets our offense in system and is a big key to us playing well," Pollard said

Look for a lot of passing, and a lot of hitting as well, as the Cats open NCAA tournament play today in Ahearn Field

K-State's first test is Arkansas, a team the Wildcats bested 4-0 Sept. 7

The Razorbacks also are a team who posted a 20-6 record after limping out of the gates to a 1-5 start.

Pollard said the Wildcats must not take their opening round opponent lightly if they hope to see further action in the tournament.

"It has been a long time since we played them," Pollard said. "We have Fritz said Pollard is an essential part of K. Stare's ability to put a complete team on the court.

"Jennifer is a tremendous ballcontrol player," Fritz said, "But she is also going to get her kills. She is going to work, she is going to stay on it and she is going to chip away at you until she wears you down, and that is Jenny.

K-State begins NCAA Tournament play tonight against Arkansas

Kimsan State Cullegian

Records, winning streaks and head-to-head match-ups all mean nothing tonight when K-State's volleyball team steps on the court against the University of Arkansas.

Even though K-State (19-7) handled the Razorbacks (21-11) 30-26, 22 30, 30-19, 30-27 in the schools' first meeting back Sept. 7, head coach Suzie Fritz said she knows a lot of time has passed since early September.

"Arkansas struggled the first time they were here — but then they left and just went on a roll and ended up in the finals of the SEC conference and lost 19-17 in the fifth set to Florida who is a very nice ball team."

The Razorbacks are one of 11 NCAA Tournament teams K-State has played this season. The Cats compiled an 11-7 record against those teams, including five straight to finish the regular season.

Another possible definitive factor siding with the Cats this weekend will be the home atmosphere at Ahearn Field House. K-State plays hosts to the opening rounds of the NCAA tournament for the first time since 1996; an opportunity senior Liz Wegner welcomes as an advantage.

Action at Ahearn Field House K-State will host an NCAA Tournament match for only the second time in school history this weekend at Aheam.

"We are just really comfortable here in Ahearn Field House and in front of our lans," Wegner said. "It is always difficult to go to a new gym. and get used to the atmosphere and get your barring, so we are very pleased our season will continue here at home.

K-State is a combined 10-1 at Ahearn this year, with its sole loss coming to No. 2 Nebraska. Fritz said the Cats' success, not only at home, but in the conference and against top programs has always been a work

"It's very exciting - we've only lost just one match at Ahearn Field House this year, so there is no other place we would rather be," Fritz said. "This is a process, which has evolved over time, it isn't something that just began this year - it began four years ago when Liz Wegner. Lisa Mimick and Jayne Christen were freshman so this has been a continual

The 2001 class of seniors has lost just eight matches at home in their four-year careers with K-State, Wegner said the experience she has, along with teammates Christen and Mimick, will propel them even more into leadership roles during postseason play.

"I have been in this situation the past three years and I am used to it, Wegner said. "So, I see myself as a leader in the sense that I have to tell the girls who haven't experienced this that it is just another match and to stay focused at all times, but they are handling it well, and I think we will be ready to compete this weekend."

Perhaps the only possible concern, sophomore Cari Jensen said, is the team overlooking Arkansas, hoping for another rematch with rival

The Cornhuskers defeated the Cats in both meetings this year, and hold a 61-1 series advantage over the Wildcats, which is why the team can't get ahead of themselves, Jensen said.

"We can't even talk about or think about Saturday and the possibility of playing Nebraska," Jensen said. "Our team has to focus on doing what we do best and that is staying on opponents' tendencies and taking games one at a time.

Drew Rose/Col

Sophomore Kris Jensen digs a ball in action earlier this season at Ahearn Field House. This weekend, three teams will travel to Manhattan to compete in the NCAA Tournament's first and second rounds.

'Having the momentum we've had is a big positive and we look to use that to our advantage this weekend - but wins aren't just going to happen - we are going to have to work hard and be a good volleyball team to be successful."

That same work ethic and mentality contributes to the success the team has had thus far, Fritz said. Tallying a school record 15 conference wins, and making a sixth consecutive NCAA tournament appearance is an assurance that the team won't overlook the task at hand.

"We have a defending national champion in Nebraska who has been a nemesis for us on the same side of the bracket as we are, so the significant challenge is not overlooking that first opponent," Fritz said.

"But, I am never really concerned with this team's competitive nature, they know how to compete and I am not worried about them coming out

Consistency cause for concern | Cats seek complete victory this weekend for Wildcat men

Jim Wooldridge has some hope.

K-State's head basketball coach has been visibly upset with the way his team has played so far this season, and he should be.

The Wildcats have played sporadically at best, and their first halves have looked more pathetic than one of my fellow sports writers trying to score a date (it might be best if we leave that as an inside joke).

Honestly, though, the team is searching for answers right now, and the story is written all over Wooldridge's face.

You can see it in his reactions as he paces back and forth on the sidelines, his mannerisms - the way he looks up and down the bench for someone who can provide a spark.

You also can hear it in his post-game interviews. He's even said they're not a very good team

And then, there's the living proof - on the court.

K-State has found a way to play the worst it possibly can in one half, only to storm out of the Intermission like Wooldridge gave the halftime speech of his life. It's not like Vince Lombardi was resurrected from his grave or anything.

Not to mention, the players are

They have no idea why they come out like a bunch of nancies, leaving the Bramlage Coliseum crowd wondering what they had

But one thing's for sure — they're a better team than last year

K-State's comebacks in the second half have been unprecedented, and that's exactly why they're 3-1. They almost rallied from a 17-point deficit to beat Ole Miss - and they probably should have - but this team has some Resiliency is its watch word, and they'll need it this season. But they'll also need to play a complete game. One half won't cut it in the talent-packed Big 12 Conference, and the players aren't naive. They know what's at stake. Even the newcomers have probably gotten a sense from the older guys just how much better they'll need to be - just to compete Good thing for Saturday.

K-State desperately needs a tune-up right now, and the Runnin' Bulldogs of Gardner-Webb are the answer.

Is that a high school? And what's up with "Runnin" Bulldogs? Is that some feeble attempt to draw some attention to a drowning athletic program?

I mean, come on. This is a team that is fresh off its transition year into Division-I basketball, so beware for a mop-up performance this weekend. The Cats should easily roll by with double-digits -GWU has already lost to both Georgia Southern and James Madison this year.

Yet, it's exactly what Wooldridge and his troops are asking for at this point, I know everyone talks about how competition makes a team better, but this ballgame gives the purple a chance to iron out some things and correct a lot of mistakes.

Turnovers. Ball control. Firsthalf shooting. Attacking the basket. All these things have plagued the Cats in every first half this year, and it must stop.

Give it some time, and I think things will turn around, if Larry Reid and Travis Reynolds continue to lead the way. Plus, Janerio Spurlock is on the rise as well, and Travis Canby could prove to be an invaluable post player off the bench, though he didn't play on Tuesday night for some reason.

And where is Tony Atchison? He used to be one of our go-to guys last year, and his shot has looked to be on this year as well. despite his limited playing time.

But the way I look at it, the only way for the Cats to go is up. It all starts Saturday.

Streaks can be both good and bad in any sport, but the men's basketball team has one trend it hopes to neutralize soon.

Each of K-State's first four games have followed one distinct pattern this season, with the Wildcats (3-1) falling behind early and taking a deficit into the locker room, only to mount fierce comebacks in the second half.

Fortunately, those comebacks have been enough to overtake the competition in three of the contests, senior forward Matt Siebrandt said and the players will take the wins but the sloppy first halves and slow offensive starts must be righted.

"The positive thing is to at least know that we're going to come back," Siebrandt said Tuesday. "So, that's one good thing, but for real, we've got to stop doing that, or it's going to start catching up to us, and it's not going to be so pretty in the second half."

Point guard Larry Reid said he can't explain why the team acts so lackadaisical and flat in the first 20

"I don't know what it is. It's just coming ready to play," Reid said after the Cats' 79-73 win over Tennessee State Tuesday night. "The first half really killed us - killed us again."

K-State's next chance to fix those errors will come Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum, when the Wildcats take on Gardner-Webb, who at press time boasted a record of 2-2. The Runnin' Bulldogs, of the Atlantic

Meanwhile, two Cat veterans -Reid and forward Travis Reynolds lead the purple, notching 16 and 15.3 points, respectively.

Head coach Jim Wooldridge's club has also relied on several newcomers, placing three consistently in the starting lineup - freshman Nick Williams, and transfers Gilson DeJesus and Pervis Pasco.

Whatever the mix, though, the players know they need to play better in the first half, Williams said.

"He didn't say anything that wedidn't already know," Williams said of Wooldridge's Tuesday speech. "Our defense was terrible, and we were taking care of the ball lazy.

"I don't know what it is right now. We need to figure it out. We can't keep playing like that, especially when it comes to conference time."

Winterdance coordinator Vera Orlock, associate professor of dance, said the diversity in the 11 pieces should appeal to a range of audience members. Five of them are faculty choreographed and six were put together by students.

"There were open auditions for student choreographers to have their dances featured in Winterdance," Orlock said, "We chose six of the pieces so this is not only a chance for the students to dance in front of an audience but they get to see a piece they've created fully staged with lighting Sladana Tepavcevic, graduate student in apparel and textile marketing, and Molly Bing, senior in chemistry, both choreographed a ballet piece titled "Whimsical Love" with Tara Townsley, sophomore in AMD. Tepavcevic said the piece is six minutes long with six dancers, and it was fun working with Bing, her friend and roommate.

"It makes it easier working with her because we can be honest with each other," she said. "You don't feel like you're walking on eggshells all the time.

Besides dancing in the piece she helped to choreograph, Goth performs in four other dances.

"Panther/Python" is the piece Goth choreographed with Benaiah Anderson, junior in theater, who has experience as a fight coordinator. The piece mixes dance and fight choreography and joining of the different worlds taught her a different way of using space energy. Goth said. Being in five pieces, as well as a solo in the Saturday matinee performance, can be exhausting, Goth said.

"It's more of an emotional and mental exhaustion," she said. "I have to go from one style to another and from one emotion to another. To just switch automatically is trying."

Orlock said she hopes audiences enjoy the production.

"There's a large diversity of style and talent in this show, and we have a lot of talent," she said. "This is one of the only times in the year we get to show that talent.

Jennifer Rifford, senior in theater, performs "Sinfonia" for the 2001 Winterdance.

"The dancers have worked long and hard and they've studied long and hard, and now they get the chance to integrate all that into the joy of dancing."

Area children to appear in 'The Nutcracker'

BY CORBIN H. CRABLE Knobbi Stire College

The dreams of a little girl will come true and a classic tale of Christmas magic will usher in another holiday season when Ballet Oklahoma presents

"The Nuteracker" at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain

Auditorium The Oklahoma dance troupe will present the tale of a little girl whose nutcracker doll comes to life. The ballet, which made its debut in 1892 in St. Petersburg, Russia, has become a holiday tradition for families across the world for over 100 years.

"The Nutcracker' has become a traditional holiday fare for families," Richard Martin, director of McCain, said.

"Many ballet companies make the bulk of their earned income by the multiple Nuteracker' performances in November and December, and sometimes into January, It's sort of the 'Harry Potter' of the dance world.

What makes this particular performance interesting, though, are the 64 local children who will appear in the production. Many K-State students and Manhattan residents also will have roles in the ballet, Martin said.

"The locals were auditioned by Ballet Oklahoma in October," he said. "Ballet Oklahoma's idea is that if you can identify competent performers locally. they will use them. This production is designed to incorporate local children and adults.

Sharron Washington, a local dance teacher, said she's had the pleasure of working with a diverse group of performers in preparation for "The Nutcracker."

"In the show, the youngest performers are 6 and 7. They're just darling," Washington said. "From there, the beginning scene (the party scene) is done entirely by locals. The children are all students from Manhattan and Fort

Even the lead roles of Clara and Fritz. Washington said, are children from the

"They've been very dedicated. We're very proud of them, and they're ready to go," she said.

Martin said the fact that Manhattan and Fort Biley children were selected to perform in this production shows the community has diverse talent.

"These youngsters came from a number of dance programs here in the community, and I'm grateful that dance instructors in the community have encouraged their students to audition," Martin said.

Joyce Yagerline, associate professor of dance, also helped the dancers rehearse. Yagerline said she has performed "The Nutcracker" over 200 times.

Because of my experience, I know the music inside and out, and I treated the children like professional dancers," Yagerline said. "There are different versions of 'The Nutcracker,' but the music stays the same."

Washington said the performers, who will have dress rehearsals Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning, are very much looking forward to Sunday afternoon's show.

"There's a lot of anticipation and excitement." Washington said. "It's quite a weekend."

Yagerline said she thinks 'The Nutcracker' offers the perfect chance for local children to work closely with experienced dancers.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for children to work with a professional ballet company, and to dance on the McCain stage is an honor and a privilege," she said.

BY RANDY REGIER

Guard adopts new role on younger, 'better' K-State team

BY MICHAEL NOLL

Reman State Collector

This season should have been the crowning achievement in a fine career for women's basketball guard Kristin Rethman.

The senior has accomplished much during her tenure in Manhattan:

She started for three years. She owns the K-State season and career records for three-point field goal percentage. . She's within reach of the alltime men's and women's career record for three-point shots made

However, this season, Rethman starts the game on the bench and watches freshmen play the minutes that were hers in the past, It is a situation that can cause hard feelings for even the best-intentioned players. Few would blame Rethman for feeling at least a little Amazingly, though, she has no bad feelings toward her younger teammates.

"Everybody has a role. You have to accept it for the good of the team," Rethman said.

"If they're getting the most minutes on the floor, then I've just got to get them ready and then come in and work hard. My thinking stems from the coaches' philosophy that everybody has a role. I've got a good understanding

Such an understanding isn't common, head coach Deb Patterson said.

"That's rare in a senior - not that she didn't complain, but that she continues to bring focus and energy to the floor," Patterson

"That is Kristin Rethman. Her character is special."

Changing roles wasn't easy for Rethman, but there's one statistic that's more important to the Corning, Kan., native - 15-33. That is K-State's conference record during Rethman's three years at K-

"It was hard to do, not being on the floor, but it's also been hard because we haven't had a lot of success," Rethman said.

"If these young players are on the floor and we win, that's good. I want to win.

Such a team concept is apparent to Patterson.

"She's such a team player and wants to win so bad," Patterson

She's mature enough to help the team be better than the other teams that she's played on."

As a sign of that maturity, Rethman spends her time on the pine watching to see how she can contribute to the team.

"You get a different perspective from the bench," she said. "You can see what's going on and what you have to do - scoring, taking care of the ball and keeping the team in the offense.

So far this season, Rethman has done more than just contribute, Patterson said. While playing nearly 17 fewer minutes per game, Rethman still has averaged almost nine points a game and is shooting three-point shots at her highest percentage ever.

In K-State's recent appearance in the Paradise Jam Tournament in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, Rethman had an even bigger

"Two out of three games in St. Thomas, Kristin Rethman was the deal," Patterson said. "She came in when the younger players were struggling, and she went 5-6 and

In the game we didn't win, she struggled. Of course, the rest of the team struggled. They were just like, here, Kristin you take it. If we had played better, it would have made things easier for Kristin."

Nevertheless, the fact remains that the Cats go as far as Rethman

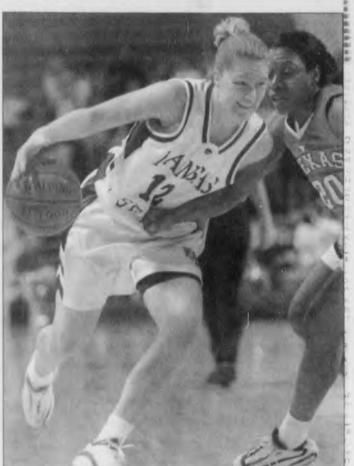

"As the sixth man, if you can get that kind of play when the younger players are struggling, it helps a lot. It takes the load of the world off the offense and defense. Our success is tied to her play," Patterson. "We need her to be instant offense."

As a result, this season could still be a nice end to Rethman's career.

*She is one of the most unselfish and team-oriented players I've ever had the opportunity to coach and be around." Patterson said.

"In my mind, she truly is a hero at this early point in the season because she is teaching this team what team really means. She's teaching this team about positive attitude. She's teaching them about work ethic and selflessness, and those are all character traits that every coach dreams of in their

K-State plays host to weekend Wildcat Classic at Bramlage Coliseum

BY MICHAEL NOLL

K-State women's basketball headcoach Deb Patterson couldn't have picked a better way to prepare her team for the intensity of the Big 12

After spending Thanksgiving break in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, for the Paradise Jam. less than a week later, the Cats will play in their second tournament - this time in Manhattan, Kan.

K-State will be host the seventhannual Commerce Bank Wildcat

Classic in Bramlage Coliseum today and Saturday. The three visiting teams - Idaho State, Grambling State and Harvard — all have different styles. and combined with the short rest time, will ready the Cats for Big 12

"The turnaround for league play is very quick and demanding," Patterson said. "This will test our team emotionally, mentally and physically.

K-State (4-1) first will face Grambling State (1-4) at 5 p.m. today after the tournament tipoff between Harvard and Idaho State at 3 p.m. Despite Grambling State's record, the Tigers are no strangers to Big 12

"Grambling State played and was defeated by KU," Patterson said. They're quick and move the ball a lot. They like to score quickly They fire up a lot of shots and have no conscience about who and when. They try to get you to play their way a little bit."

On Saturday, the Cats will play the winner of the Idaho State (2-2) and Harvard (2-2) game at 5 p.m. Both teams present unique styles, Patterson said.

"Idaho State was an NCAA tournament team last year, and we expect them to be good. They Il be aggressive inside and out," she said. "Flarvard has the classic pass and cut style of basketball

It will help the club because we'll see very diverse and different styles

The Cats are not unaccustomed to pressure or demanding tests on the court, though Last Sunday in the second game of the tournament at St. Thomas, the Cats faced a rough, physical pressure defense from No. 21. Arizona State. The result, a 76-58 loss, signaled a new level of opponent for and a sophomore. "Arizona State was an eye-opener for the younger players," senior guard Kristin Rethman said. "They haven't faced that kind of pressure.

the Cats, who started four freshmen

As a result, the loss was a learning experience. Patterson said.

We had a test of our confidence and character after Arizona State," she said. "We played tight, young and alraid for the first time this year."

Against Arizona State's extreme pressure defense, the young players relied too much on Rethman to run the offense, Patterson said.

K-State has history on its side, though. The Cats have won the Wildcat Classic all but one time and have placed 12 players on the All-Tournament learn. Overall, K-State has an 11-1 record in the Classic.

Eugene Field closing in late spring; school supporters disappointed

covering the

BY NANCY FOSTER

es State Collegias

Eugene Field Elementary School is a real gem, Principal Mary Stamey, said. The city just does not know

There is only one classroom per grade. But at the same time, it has all the benefits and support of being in a large district.

"I tell people it's like driving the old-fashioned Volkswagen - everything is within reach," she said.

So, when the Manhattan School Board named Eugene Field as a primary candidate for closing, Stamey said she was stricken with sadness. But it wasn't the first time the board had discussed closing Eugene. It had been brought up intermittently for the last 20 years.

Still, that did not lessen the grief those in the district felt Nov. 20 when the board voted unanimously for Eugene to close its doors.

"It's sad," said Kathy Dzewaltowski, mother of two students at the school.

"We've realized our days are numbered, and we're just counting them down.'

However, Eugene was not the only school to receive such news. Bluemont Elementary also was voted to close. Woodrow Wilson, which also was an option, survived the cut.

With decreased enrollment and increased budget constraints, the board looked to closing a school down to help trim $2 million from the budget. By closing the two schools, it projects savings of around $528,000. Eugene alone will save about $171,000.

"It's just an unfortunate circumstance we're in," said Michele Jones, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 communications coordinator.

Eugene was chosen, she said. because it is the smallest school. It is on one floor, six classrooms and 110 students. If it was kept open, she said, there would not be enough classrooms for more students after redis-

"It's been a grieving process for the parents, teachers and kids," Jones said. many of the houses are rental "People are anxious to find out what the next step is, where their kids will be going, where the redistricting will be - a lot of, 'What's next? 'Ouestions?"

Those questions will not be answered until possibly January. For now, all that is known is that the school will become a Head Start center.

"It won't be a K-6, but it will be an early education building," Jones said. "So, it won't sit empty." But that does not simmer the feelings of many parents schools. in the district. They, along with Stamey, said losing the elementary school will change the dynamics of their neighborhoods - something they do not want to happen.

"It will affect the city, the community and the people," Starney said. "And it will ripple on for a few years." Because of the school's proximity to K-State, many college students live in the Eugene district. Therefore, property, and the prices are driven higher. Dzewaltowski said the higher prices can deter families from moving to the neighborhood, but with the school, it could still attract residents.

"I'm even more afraid of that now - that CLOSINGS families won't want to move into our neighbor-This is the third in a series of stories hoods - because now there's not even a school,"

Manhattan USD Dzewaltowski said. 383 School Board's Dzewaltowski said the decision to close reason her neighborhood Eugene Field becomes a haven for college students is because of the city's > limited housing. But the university also is responsible, she said, because it has not increased housing since the

"A lot of the responsibility is K-State because now the students have to move into our community, which is OK, but they don't bring kids. And that hurts enrollment," she said.

The 83-year-old school was one of the first two in Manhattan. Though it has added on since its opening, it still remains the smallest elementary school in the city. However, that small size is what parents said they love. In fact, that's why Dzewaltowski moved into the neighborhood. She wanted her children to attend a smaller school.

"There aren't many places you'll find in this country where there's one classroom for each grade. I mean, what's not to love about this?" she

The parents and teachers feel the small school setting is an optimum learning environment. So when they knew it might close, they took action - action that is apparent from the chain-linked fence surrounding the playground. It is adorned with 62 ribbons naming successful Eugene graduates. And a banner that reads, 'Small neighborhood schools produce great results!" next to them. "I think Manhattan is going to regret this decision, not just closing Eugene Field, but just closing a school," Dzewaltowski said. "I think there were other measures they could have taken. This should have been the last resort, and I don't think it was.

"I think unless it's falling apart, they shouldn't close it down. It should be the last thing."

To show the board how concerned the community was with the closing, Phyllis Pease, a mother of two at Eugene, and other parents organized a fund-raiser to help pay for the school's operating expenses. It received $18,743.97 in pledges. And that was in only seven days. Now, it is undecided if, or how, the money will be used.

"The damage that will happen doesn't outweigh the money that will be saved," Pease said.

Pease said now parents will meet and discuss if and where they will use the money.

Dzewaltowski said she felt like she was betrayed.

"It's kids, lives, families. Anytime you're dealing with kids, it's not just statistics and numbers," Dzewaltowski

Karen Bowser Kappa Kappa Gamma Senior, Public Relations GPA: 3.72

Brian Hall

Alpha Tau Omega Sophomore, English Pre-Med GPA: 3.46

Karen serves as the Homecoming Chair and Technology Chair for her chapter. She is also actively involved in Golden Key, PRSSA, and Circle K. During October, she not only coordinated homecoming activities for her chapter, but also worked to create an online database for Kappa alumnae. She also created a newsletter and assisted with recruitment for Golden Key and was involved in various PRSSA activities. Karen's strong work ethic and commitment to her chapter and campus organizations provides an outstanding example for other students.

Brian is the social service coordinator for his chapter. In addition to excelling in the classroom, Brian works with several different community service organizations around Manhattan. This semester he organized the chapter's participation in Fright Night, planned a pumpkin painting project with the Boys and Girls Club, recruited Special Olympic volunteers, served as a Big Brother for Manhattan's Big Brother/ Big Sister program, was the VP of Habitat for Humanity, and volunteered for Homecare and Hospice among other things. His passion for community service and drive to be a productive Greek member and citizen is commendable.

In addition to keeping a high GPA in a difficult curriculum, Eric serves as the President of his chapter. He organized a benefit concert to raise money for charity while simultaneously performing the duties associated with his executive office. Eric is involved with several honoraries and organizations around campus including: Mortar Board, Campus Greens, Manhattan Day Care volunteer, instructor for a KSU course, etc. He has been awarded several scholarships from the University and his fraternity. Eric's hard work and persistence shows through in everything he does and is an example to everyone who works

University, city discuss state of student housing

State and Manhattan must join forces to alleviate a persistent offcampus housing issue, officials say, but the good news is, students always should have places to live on campus. The biggest problem with off-campus housing, Mayor Bruce Snead said, is there is not enough of it. He said he believes the university has a vital role to play in working with the city to increase the availability and affordability of off-campus

"All of the stakeholders have responsibilities - that includes the university," he said.

Student enrollment should remain steady, said Chuck Werring, director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, so campus housing should be able to accommodate those who choose to live on campus.

"Our role is to provide housing for all those people who want to live on campus," Werring said. "I said when I came here I never thought K-State would reach more residence halls, which is almost capacity. than 23,500 people, and that's not going to happen. That won't happen."

An addition to the Jardine Terrace Apartments, including townhouses, will increase students' choices and on-campus opportunities, he said, but the additions will not occur quickly enough to relieve the city's frustrations with student housing off-campus.

"K-State obviously provides housing, but we're not going to be the panacea for the city's problems on housing," he said. "and the other unrealistic part of it is, the lanline project's not going to happen overnight. It will be over time.

Whether the responsibility to improve off-campus housing lies with the city or the university, improvements will continue, and the Jardine project will proceed on campus, creating more housing opportunities also:

"We've had a lot of progress on housing issues." Snead said, "but we have a lot to

RESIDENCE HALLS

About 3,800 people occupy K-State's

This fall the Department of Housing and Dining Services used some of the halls' rooms that were not traditionally used. such as terrace rooms, computer rooms and study rooms to house students. Still, with a steady student population and strategic planning, Werring said any student who wants one should be able to have a room in the halls.

Some of the planning relies on researching the gender need of housing, Werring said. Traditionally, more women than men live in the balls, so if needed, a men's wing could be turned into a women's wing.

"The single-gender halls we have right now might become more slowly co-ed halls, depending upon the need from one year to the next," he said. "That's the flexibility we have to plan for. We may, down the line, say we're going to take one of the men's halls and put women in there."

About 200 students move out after the first semester of each year, allowing some students to contract for a single room.

President condemns violent act in Israel

BY BARRY SCHWEID Top Auxoriated Franc

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Denouncing suicide hombings in Israel as horrific acts of murder, President Bush on Sunday conferred with Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon as flickering U.S. hopes for peace in. the Middle East dimmed.

What was to have been a pep talk to Sharon to get started on tentative peace moves with Yasser Arafat was transformed suddenly into an emergency White House session that shifted the burden to the Palestinian leader to prove he can stop. terrorism.

Bush administration officials suggested Arafat might not have a sure grip on control of the Palestinian movement.

"He is not a particularly strong leader." Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said, "and I don't know that he has good control over the Palestiman situation."

Bush met with Sharon for an hour. Secretary of State Colin Powell and Condoleezza Rice, the president's national security assistant, sat in.

If Bush asked Sharon to hold his fire in response to a new bloody siege, neither he nor White House officials would say. In fact, they suggested the onus was now on Arafat to curb Hamas and other militant Palestinian groups and halt the attacks on

"Chairman Arafat must do everything in his power to find those who murdered innocent Israelis and bring them to. justice. Bush said before the meeting when he returned from Camp David. He also urged other Arab leaders in the area to take a more active role in bringing about stability and peace.

"The advocates of peace in the Middle East must rise up and fight terror," Bush

After the meeting, Sharon aide Dore Gold said Israel will have to do what is necessary to protect itself. The prime minister ignored reporters' questions as he left the White House and headed for home.

White House spokesman Sean McCormick said the focus was on Arafat and the Palestinian leadership to act against terrorist groups, "if he is to be a leader.

Union-sponsored event provides chance to eat with Santa, present gift list

Manhattan-area children turn out to meet jolly old St. Nick in preparation for holiday season

BY JENNIFER FARR Ruman State Collegian

As Christmas music hummed in the background, children gathered inside of Union Station at the K-State Student Union on Saturday to eat breakfast with Santa and Mrs. Claus.

Before meeting Santa, children enjoyed a variety of breakfast foods such as bacon, eggs and biscuits, but never left their Christmas requests far from their

"I'm going to ask him for fingernail polish and Christmas tights," Cheyenne Koppa said.

Dawn Koppa, Manhattan resident, said the main reason she and her two children came was to see Santa. While Cheyenne was ready with her Christmas requests, Dawn said her son, Josh, was less sure what he wanted.

"Maybe a bike," Dawn said of her son's Christmas requests.

Carole Lovin, grant and contracts specialist, said she came so her two children could see Santa. She also said she thought the idea of having breakfast with Santa was innovative and would be a good, fun experience for her children. "I have a 6-year-old son, and I thought it was a neat idea because it has never ever been done before, to my recollection," Lovin said. Pam Soeken and Eric Braun, from the K-State Student Union Food Service. coordinated the breakfast with Santa. Soeken said she came up with the idea for the event because it had never been done before, and Braun helped her initiate it. Soeken said the $2 admission fee did not even cover the costs that Food Service had to provide for the event. She said, however, more people attended than she thought would.

Soeken said about 300 people attended the event.

"This was definitely a not-for-profit venture, for we did not even come close to covering the costs," Soeken said.

"Yet it was a lot of fun to put together and seeing the little ones' faces and that made this experience entirely overwhelming. I'm very glad that we decided to do this." Soeken said community members who missed their first chance to have breakfast with Santa will have a second chance from 8:30 to 11 a.m. Saturday at Union

"We would love for anyone to attend." Soeken said.

"I think it will be a fun and one-of-akind experience for the kids to have."

Codey Patrick describes his Christmas wishes to Santa while Brooklyn and Bridget Klosow look on in anticipation. The breakfast with Santa and Mrs. Claus took place Saturday in the K-State Student Union Station.

Census study examines separation between races

TOPEKA - As the Hispanic population grew in the past decade in Kansas' four largest cities, so did the degree of separation between it and white residents:

At the same time, urban blacks became a little more integrated with whites, although some say there's still room for improvement.

Those conclusions were based un an Associated Press review of detailed census information on race in communities of more than 100,000.

In Kausas, they are Wichita, Overland Park, Kansas City and Topeka.

The dissimilarity index was created to measure the degree by which Hispanies, blacks and Asians are segregated from whites. Ranging from zero to 100, the higher the index rating, the greater the segregation.

The median index rating for Hispanics in the four cities was 53.5. in 2000, up from 52.8 in 1990. For blacks, it was 62.05 in 2000, down from 66.5 in 1990.

WASHINGTON, D.C. - American military forces in Alghanistan, now numbering up to 2,000 troops.

Rumsfeld described the situation in Kandahar, the last remaining Taliban stronghold, as confused. and acknowledged the difficulty of penetrating cave systems deep inthe mountains of eastern Afghanistan.

We're entering a very dangerous aspect of this conflict." he said on NBC's 'Meet the Press.

The remaining task is a particularly dirty and unpleasant one. Rumsfeld was asked whether U.S. forces might pour gas into the cave complexes to flush out the terrorists.

"One will do whatever it is necessary to do," he replied. "It people will not surrender, then they've made their choice.

He said that in Mazar-e-Sharif, opposition forces flooded a tunnel in order to get the last al-Qaeda fighters, whom he called deadenders, to come out and surrender.

Terrorism investigations seldom tried before attack

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Federal agents who conducted thousands of terrorism investigations last year sought prosecution of fewer than 500 individuals, and most of those never made it to court, Justice Department records show.

The FBI and other federal investigative agencies asked U.S. attorneys to charge 463 people with domestic or international terrorism crimes during the year ending Sept. 30. All but 10 of the requests came before the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

That was almost twice as many prosecution referrals for terrorism as the previous year, but still only a tiny fraction of the more than 10,000 terrorism investigations the FBI has reported annually for the past several FBI officials said the numbers are not surprising, given the agency's focus on preventing rather than prosecuting terrorism.

Since Sept. 11, officials said, that Incus has increased, and the disparity between the numbers of investigations and prosecutions probably will increase.

The gas was piped into Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle's office saire for eight hours Saturday After the lumigation, a second chemical, sodium bisulfite, was inserted to break down the gas.

Assumptions, common sense questioned to find full story

Thursday's column "Blame Game" on "frivolous lawsuits" has the feel of common sense, something everybody can agree to without thinking hard or needing much information about. It does this by perpetuating one story (through the loke drawing next to it of the cup with "DO NOT POUR ON SELF" on it) that has become virtually an "urban myth" on the topic.

I refer to the notorious "hot coffee" lawsuit in which a woman sued the corporation we all trust for all its benevolent work in our behalf. McDonald's.

The myth puts us on the side of the big corporation, as the woman who sued when she spilled coffee on herself sounds like an opportunistic bimbo. Or so it would seem.

But virtually everyone ignores the whole story, distorted by this myth. In trying to recover expenses only for reconstructive surgical work in damage to her genitalia incurred by a spill (however justified or not that might be), her lawyers discovered from internally suppressed documents that McDonald's for some reason not only had hundreds of surprisingly severe injury claims regarding its coffee, but that the reason was the company kept its coffee at abnormally higher temperatures than normal hot coffee you or I might make.

It was only then that the lawyers went beyond the limited medical claim to go after McDonald's for a wider, large, class-action type of suit. The claim is NOT as stupid, then, as virtually everyone is led to believe. If, for instance, someone sold you a Slurpee with dry ice in it (to help keep it cold for increased sales) and, by assuming it was a normally cold Slurpee, you ended up burning your tongue (I realize this is an analogy with some differences), you might see reason to do more than just complain.

Now, this is not to say people don't abuse the legal system. But this particular hot coffee myth, and the whole topic of passing the blame, serves the interest of certain groups, namely large corporations such as McDonald's, just as the infamous "welfare queen," who turned out to be nonexistent, served the interest of those attacking the welfare system in the '80s. Remember this whenever you hear this story again, and such "outrageous" stories that seem obvious, appealing to your common sense, particularly if a consequence is that you support or don't question legislation designed for, and with the assistance, of large corporate lobbyists, often against consumers. If it seems obvious, question it, and ask whose interest it serves. College means testing assumptions.

Professional organizers prove organization lucrative job

At the twilight of another semester, it seems as if everyone you meet desperately needs a little more organization. We all are overwhelmed with upcoming finals, frantic holiday shopping and tying up loose ends that seem to be unraveling at a neckbreaking pace.

Unless, of course, you are one of those people who are inherently organized. You know the type I am talking about: the people who never miss deadlines, never procrastinate, never have conflicting schedules and never have emotional breakdowns 45 minutes before a final project is due on account of the computer printer's not working, the file not being saved, the keyboard's being frozen and the rough draft nowhere to be found. Aughh!

I know fastidiously organized people like this and have always considered them an anomaly. I regarded them as some sort of serene illusion in a naturally panicked world. As it turns out, there are more organized people than I gave credit to.

Professional organizers actually exist.

That is their job title - professional organizers. These people are able to earn a living by dealing with many types of organizational problems. Specialists are available in fields ranging from bookkeeping and home office management to closet organizing, garage sale planning and paper

Whatever your specific organizational need is, there more than likely is a professional somewhere who is equipped to deal with it, or teach you how. There even are professional organizing coaches with services for hire.

The National Association of Professional Organizers (NAPO) has chapters all over the United States ranging from the East Coast to the West Coast. While there are no NAPO chapters in Kansas, several professional organizers offer services in Topeka. Junction City and Lawrence.

No actual degree is required to become a professional organizer. Lynn Moses Boza, a professional organizer based out of Topeka, said experience in being organized comes from living life, and learning how to coordinate day-to-day tasks. Although the NAPO does offer training and informational courses in professional organizing, a successful professional organizer's credibility will speak through their work.

These organizers often work by an hourly rate and work with, rather than for, the client. This organizer-client relationship enables the client to see the process of getting organized in hopes of effectively maintaining that valuable sense of peace that comes from organization.

Not only do they come into the home or office and help directly with organizational duties, but some professional organizers offer workshops and presentations on becoming organized.

Moses Boza, who has conducted both flat rate fee workshops and free informational presentations, said the career of professional organization is a relatively new

These workshops and presentations aid in developing organizational skills through lecture style teaching and exchange of ideas. Also, they are helpful in informing people who might be having organizational problems of the variety of services available through professional organizers.

Although a professional organizer might not be the answer to pre-finals week anxiety and organizational stress, this type of professional is available.

Miss Black and Gold 2000, Tiffany Lee, crowned the new winners, relinquishing her title. She will accompany Babb to the regional pageant. She said her two favorite parts of the pageant are the rehearsal process and the talent. Babb also said she enjoyed the preparation for the competition.

"We had to practice and practice and practice at least once a week for about the last 11 or 12 weeks," Babb said. "My favorite part was getting to know the girls and watching everything come together."

Cats earn opening victory, fall to Huskers in 2nd round

BY SEAN PURCELL AND DAN SMITH

K-STATE

-state players knew going into their rematch with defending national champion Nebraska that only its best performance would earn them a spot in the Sweet 16.

By night's end, however, it was too much Nancy Metcalf, too much Greichaly Cepero and just too much Big Red

The No. 18 Wildcats (20-8) ended their 2001 campaign with a four-set loss to the Huskers 25-30. 30-28, 26-30, 19-30 Saturday night in Ahearn Field House. It marked just the second time the Cats lost at home on the year, both coming to Nebraska (29-1).

Afterwards, emotions filled a quiet press room as players and coaches knew another season was done.

Tam very proud to be the volleyball coach of this team," head coach Suzie Fritz said. "I thought wefought the good fight and gave them everything we had, and it is unfortunate that this senior class with Liz, Jayne and Lisa had to get this draw for the tournament because they are a top 16 team without Nebraska established a stronghold on the match from the opening serve. Before the Cars could muster a single point on the Huskers, the score was 7-0. Although K-State mounted a significant comeback late in the game, the Huskers were able to silence a fired-up Wildcat crowd when Metcalf scored the game-ending kill to put Nebraska up 1-0.

Coming into the match, the Cats' gameplan was to let the Huskers make mistakes, senior Liz Wegner said. In game one, however, the Cats failed to do that.

I didn't think we played very well that first g I think we gave them too much," Wegner said. "We talked about playing our game and letting them break down, not us, and we did a lot better job of that in the second game.

We were able to gather some momentum at the end of the first game, and we talked about carrying that over into the second. We did a lot of things hetter in game two, and that was the difference."

In fact, things improved quite a bit in the second ser for K-State. A combination of five Nebraska serving errors and four Wildcat aces squared the match at one game apiece. Wegner and Lisa Mimick. K-State's All-Big 12 seniors, tallied eight of the Cats' 14 kills as the two teams headed to the locker room.

Coming out of the break, though, K-State was the same team that took a set from the No. 2 Huskers just minutes prior. But the defending champions. showed why they went undefeated through the Big. 12 as seven team blocks led to a 30-26 third-set winfor Nebraska. The Huskers sizzled on 311 hitting with Metcalf pacing the team with four kills.

Even though K-State bested the Huskers in kills and digs, lare serving errors in the midst of a

Nebraska 6-0 run proved to be the difference. "For us, it was a matter of unforced errors," Fotzsaid. "We made a couple of hitting errors and serving errors late in game three, and we mok ourselves out of that one I think."

Game four was a forgone conclusion after the way Nebraska closed out the third set. Senior Jayne Christen led the Cats in a 30-19 losing effort with three kills, but K-State's defense couldn't contain the Husker attack, though, and Nebraska's Iront line scored five blocks and held the Cats to .125 hitting.

They have the biggest left-side block to the country, and they field a second-team All-American to four percent hitting," Fritz said. "It is very difficult to be successful if you can't win the serve and pass. and it becomes a left-side game. Then it is very rough to beat them." K-State's seniors would not let it slip away easily. though, and fought for every point even in the final set. Mimick and Wegner paced the team with 13 and 12 kills respectively. Mimick tallied a game-high 25 digs and Christen led the Cats with 2.5 blocks.

Fritz said she's proud of the way her seniors played in their last appearance in a Wildcar uniform.

This is my first year as a head coach, and I told the team that this is the best team I have ever had the privilege of coaching." Fritz said. "There are so many good things about this group. They are good people and good citizens, and they care a lot about each other and they care a lot about me. They do a lot of things well, and the seniors are going to be great after K-State, which is our goal. We want them to be great at K-State, and we want them to do good things afterwards and I have no doubt that these

In their first two contests this season. No. 2 Nebraska didn't need much help handling No. 18 K-State, recording three-game shutours in both matches.

But on Saturday night in Ahearn Field House — where NU now has a 28-0 all-time advantage over the Wildcats - several K-State scoring droughts gave the Huskers all the aid they required to eliminate the Cats in four sets and secure a birth in the sweet 16.

"It's a game of runs - especially in a match like this, with so much emotion those runs really create a lot of energy," Nebraska head coach John Cook said,

NU's first scoring run would come early. as the Huskers capitalized on three Wildcat errors and tallied four kills to post a 7-0 start

"They can score points in bunches," K-

State head coach Suzie Fritz said: "They've always been able to do that."

The Huskers' early success wouldn't end there, though

After Jenny Pollard's kill got K-State on the board, NU would rattle off seven of the set's next eight points to take a 14-2 lead.

"I think our team was really excited that we did get that run, but we also knew that K-State's a really good team and they weren't just going to lay down and let us win that easy," Nebraska senior outside hitter Nancy Metcalf said. "We knew they'd be fighting back, and they would be fighting for every point. K-State would battle back in the first set, scoring six of the next seven points, including a 4-0 run to pull within seven at 15-8, but the Huskers would push the lead to eight on the next volley, and held off a late Wildcar charge to take the set and the early momentum.

In game two. Nebraska again took advantage of several costly K-State mistakes and used a strong hitting performance in the game's early stages to take a 7-3 lead. With Nebraska leading 8-7, the Huskers expended another 7-0 run to push the lead to eight, but this time K-State would overcome the NU attack with a 4-0 run to take the lead, and eventually the game, 30-28.

With the match tied at a game apiece, both teams came out with an inspired effort in the third frame.

Although K-State would trail the Huskers for much of game three, the Cats used a solid defensive performance to push ahead at 22-21, only to suffer from another scoreless stretch - this time six unanswered Nebraska points

"We knew we had to fight hard for every point," Metcalf said. "We expected long rallies

K-State got off to a quick start in the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic by trampling Grambling State 105-54. The Cats used early runs of 13 and 11 unanswered points to jump out to a 62-31 halftime lead.

For the game, K-State shot 59.7 percent from the field and showed overall improvement offensively. head coach Deb Patterson said.

"I told our ball club that they did show signs of getting better tonight," she said, "and that's not just because we scored the ball a lot, but it's because we started to cut and pass and move and get to the spots on the floor like we need to be successful."

In what is becoming a trend for the Cats, freshman forward Kendra Wecker led the team in scoring with 22 points. The performance was unusual, however, in that all of her points came from inside the three-

"Right now, I'm kind of struggling with my outside shot, and I'm not really confident with myself and just hesitating and just thinking about it too much," Wecker said.

While the Cats had no problem scoring, their defense was a mix of good and bad, part of which was due to reserve players getting a lot of playing time in the second half, Patterson said.

"A lot of that is playing young players who are getting beat a little bit on the dribble and on strong

That was something where I had some easy shots that weren't falling at the beginning of the game," Wecker said. "When things aren't going well offensively, you have to work hard and make things happen in other areas on the court.

"I guess I was just aggressive tonight going after the ball."

Sophomore Nicole Ohlde added 16 points for K-State, and two other Wildcats also finished with double-digit points.

ARKANSAS K-STATE

K-State came close to using all nine of its Wildcat lives in the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

However, it was K-State (20-7) that would survive to play another round in a thrilling five-set win (30-15, 18-30, 27-30, 30-18, 15-8) Friday night at Ahearn Field House.

K-State dominated play in the first set, outhitting the Lady Razorbacks .528-.056, but Arkansas (21-12) would right the ship and storm back in the next two games before letting it all fall apart again in the final two sets.

"We started off just on fire." K-State head coach Suzie Fritz said. "We got a little complacent in game two, came out a little flat after game three, but when it counted, we got it

The Wildcats held the Lady Razorbacks to eight kills in the first game and jumped out to an early 7-2 lead after beginning the set with a 4-0 run fueled by senior outside hitter Liz Wegner's timely attacks.

Wegner and junior Jenny Pollard combined to lead the Cats with 13 kills and eight digs as K-State took the early advantage with the help of 2,114 fans who seemed to grow louder with every Wildcat point.

"Big crowd - at the beginning of the match, they took us out of it," Arkansas head coach Chris Poole said. "It's a disappointing loss. When we saw the draw, we knew it was going to be a tough match."

But it was K-State that was out of rhythm in the second set, committing eight attack errors, and Arkansas was back in the match after a 30-18 allowed just three K-State runs over two points, and used a 4-0 run of its own to tie the contest.

"I think the big thing is, I told them they just needed to go out and play," Poole said. "We were playing in games one, four and five, very tentative. We play great at times, and we play not to lose at times.'

In game three, Arkansas still had the momentum hitting at a .349 clip that included 15 kills from outside hitters Anna Velikanova and Eftila

Wegner, who taillied 25 kills in the contest, was held to six in game

"I thought they served and passed really well, and I thought we didn't in the second and third games, and that's so important in this style of volleyball right now," Wegner said.

But Arkansas would again suffer from tentative play in the fourth set, especially on defense, allowing K-State to post a .318 hitting percentage, and lost the set 30-18. "The biggest factor for us was we were just doing a better job of winning the serve attacks, and we were doing a better job of controlling the net," Fritz said.

The Wildcats used three Arkansas errors and a nearly perfect hitting performance in game four's opening volleys to jump out to another 7-2 lead, and withstood several late Lady Razorback scoring barrages to send, the match to a fifth and deciding set.

The Cats didn't miss a beat, using another 7-2 start to keep Arkansas on its heels and complete the comefrom-behind win.

"There's been a lot of matches this year that we've been up - four matches that we've been up 2-0 or 2-1, only to let a team come back and beat us," Poole said.

We've still got some young players out there that still have to be better at playing not to lose, but playing to win.'

Ah, the end of another successful semester is nearing. and not a dry eye remains her at the Collegian.

As students cram for final exams and get that last bit of partying out of their systems before heading back to their hometowns

Dan Smith to spend some quality hoilday time with the family, everyone should take a bit of time and reflect about the last three and a half months in Manhattan.

Respectfully, I submit my semester in review to you the reader for analysis.

■ It wasn't quite the football season that we've grown accustomed to here in Manhattan. Nobody would have predicted > that K-State would be fighting for a bowl spot against Missouri come late-November.

The Wildcats made us proud, though, and turned what could have been an extremely disappointing

■ Preseason basketball wasn't slight-disheartening one. quite the chore it has been in years past either. Second-year men's coach lim Wooldridge has brought some great talent to hard it is to kick a field goal or Bramlage Coliseum and with it extra point.

Saturday

■ We saw the volleyball team comes new expectations for what could become a great chapter in Wildcat basketball.

K-State has already produced some thrilling come-frombehind wins and will look to shock the Big 12 when conference play begins lan. 6.

■ Veteran women's basketball coach Deb Patterson has probably the best group of young players in the conference on her roster this season.

Freshmen Kendra Wecker, Megan Mahoney and Kari Hanson have already earned spots in the starting lineup with stellar play and redshirt phenom Laurie Koehn and sophomore Nicole Ohlde flesh out Patterson's fab live, and we saw firsthand how good the Cats are when they reached the century mark on Friday night.

■ Terrorist attacks on Sept. 11 changed the way we look at many aspects of society. including the sports world. Football and volleyball games were postponed, practices were canceled, and fans turned out in droves and joined in patriotism prior to the game singing the national anthem as a tribute at the Wildcats' Sept. 22 game against New Mexico State.

Whatever the moment, K-State sports again captured the student body and brought out the best and worst emotions of every Wildcat fan. When K-State fell short of beating Nebraska in football, we sighed and said, 'wait 'til next year." When K-State volleyball upset Texas A&M in volleyball, we cheered and yelled, "we're for real!" When K-State lost to Mississippi at Bramlage Coliseum after locking up a bowl bid by beating Missouri in football, we cussed and said, "we should have had that one.'

But one thing is certain. We lived and died K-State purple, and we'll be fighting, ever fighting for another Wildcat victory next semester.

Teen movie full of juvenile humor, gags

Maybe this movie should have been called "Out seven bucks. Basically, "Out Cold" is a bad, snowier version of all the rest of the teen movies like "American Pie" with some snowboarding scenes stuck in it.

The idea is to attract all the kids who can't get enough of jokes about horny guys, stupid pranks and scantily clad girls. So whether or not you want to admit it, you will laugh every now and then.

The movie is about a dimwitted group of snowboarding "OUT COLD" friends, led by Rick (Jason) London, "Carrie 2"), who are threatened by a corporation led by John Majors that begins to take over their ski resort. In their elforts to keep the resort while finding love or sex, there's plenty of room for seriously juvenile

Take, for instance, polar bear oral sea, poup in a cup or genitalia stuck in the hot-tub jet. If any of these gags sound like they're going to have you doubled over in laughter, get to this movie asap.

The worst part is that the movie hides behind the guise of being a snowboarding movie. While there are a few snowboarding scenes that spice up the movie, it's just a gimmick to draw in bigger audiences.

One of the more amusing performances comes from the 6 million-dollar man himself, Lee Majors, playing John Majors, Hischaracter as the greedy new resort owner is played villainously well.

Secretly, many of us will laugh at some of the juvenile gags in the film, but for the most part they just fall flat. Really, if I want to see guys getting their penises stuck where they shouldn't be. I know where to find "Porky's" at my local video

"Out Cold" is one more movie written for kids who like fart jokes, except this time it's PG-13, so that the younger kids can get in, too, It's really not worth the time or money.

New Kid Rock album adds to star's own 'cocky' image

or another, Kid Rock still appears to think screaming the "F" word for no real reason, singing about all the drugs be does and the girls he sleeps with makes his music good. Kid Rock fans will be right at home, but most of us will listen to something with a little more. sulisiance.

Kid Bock has got his craft down as far as the music goes. Loud music with big guitar riffs mixed seamlessly with Uncle Kracker's (urntables make the sound headbanging fun for anyone holding a red plastic cup full of keg

The biggest thing that has led to Kid Rock's popularity is how he embraces his trailer-trash image in making himself a sort of rock star hero for real people. Fortunately for him, there will always he plenty of people to buy music to play while they do a keg stand. Whether that's a positive or negative indicator for the state of our society is another question.

The first four tracks all give Kid Bock the chance to brag about how much be rocks. In the title track, "Cocky," he

say I'm Cocky and I say what / It ain't braggin' if you can back it up.

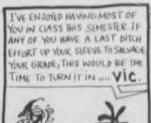

Even before listening to the predictable album, the album art shows his personality quite well. Instead of a glarmorous ruck star picture, Kid Ruck has shown himself in a wife-beater with a beer and a cigarette. Next to the dramatic studio shots are pictures of the rocker on a three-wheeler with a cigar and a shotgun.

One change fans will notice is that the back half of "Cocky" is surprisingly more sentimental than anything else Kid Bock has done. Well, it's sentimental for Kid Rock, but they pretty much all sound like "Only God Knows Why."

Anyway, this review won't matter to Kid Rock. He has and continues to get burned by critics, and he addresses it in "Lay It On Me," with the words "Trash me in the news / Give me whack reviews / but you'll never find another to fill my shoes."

HOUSING

Those students who do have a single room have two beds, Werring said, so the capacity is there to hold more students.

The halls also will continue to improve, he said, as the Housing and Dining Services conducts more renovations and provides more suites. Some hall floors received new furniture this year, and Werring said that will continue until all the floors are refurnished.

"It's just cost-prohibitive to do it all in one year," he said. "We can't afford to do it."

More students are returning to the residence halls from one year to the next — this year, 988 people returned. Still, Werring said the halls should be able to house everyone, especially if the department continues to plan on approximate numbers, looking at high school graduation rates, out-ofstate and international numbers.

He attributed the 30-33 percent student return-rate to students' enjoying the convenience and the community the residence halls offer.

James Carlson, senior in computer engineering, lives in Marlatt Hall and has done so each year since coming to K-State. He said he doesn't live there for people interaction.

"The only reason I live in the dorms still is because I have one of the suites and the convenience and not having to cook my own meals," he said. "I'm an engineering student. I can see my classrooms from my window. It's more convenient."

JARDINE TERRACE APARTMENTS

The biggest change since Werring arrived here 12 years ago was the addition of the suites in the halls, he said, and the biggest change in the future will be the Jardine project.

The project will put in apartments and townhouses, but in neighborhoods, to serve the student families, the single graduate students and the single undergraduate population, he said.

"We want to be able to create neighborhoods that would meet the needs of those three populations, and when we do that, we will be in the position to increase the density," he said. "The conceptual design plan that we have is to maximize the space, but not build it in such a way in which it looks like one of these big high-rise apartment complexes. That's not what we're after."

Snead said the plans for the Jardine project is encouraging to increase student housing, but plans need to begin soon.

"The pace needs to be as soon as possible," he said.

Housing and Dining Services just finished interviewing three companies for their economic feasibility plans, Werring said. He said they'll conduct the feasibility study this spring to see exactly what the project will cost.

He said the plan will include a strategy for Jardine to build itself to pay to keep it at capacity, and even if the student population were to increase for some reason, there would be no need to build an additional residence hall.

"There's no need to. There's no need to spend that kind of money for facilities that will eventually get taken care of by Jardine," he said.

The Wiley apartments, which are part of the Jardine neighborhood, are three buildings renovated just for undergraduates. They house about 160 people, he said. The Jardine area consists of 62 acres, which Werring said has great possibilities.

"As we develop the lardine plan, the potential will be there for more on-campus living."

GREEK HOUSING

Most sorority and fraternity houses, which stay at capacity year-round, are in good condition, and some will continue improvements, Katie Scheer, administrative assistant for greek affairs, said.

"I would say overall, the sororities are in great condition — in above average condition," she said. "I think we're in better shape than other universities."

About 80-90 women live in most sorority houses, she said, and between 35 and 50 men occupy fraternity houses. The greek houses are considered on-campus housing, although technically, all are located off campus. Each house is owned by its own chapter.

Kappa Kappa Gamma recently finished its main reconstruction, Scheer said. Phi Delta Theta is trying to get alumni funding for its new house, and Delta Sigma Phi still is in the construction process.

"With this house, we have construction annually," said Scott Tatro, who will be president of Delta Sigma Phi. "That's the life of a fraternity house."

Tatro said his fraternity house is one of the oldest on campus, but still provides adequate living conditions.

"By no means do I think this house is too run down for anyone to live in, but it does have character. We have a lot of things that go wrong because of age," he said.

He said he also thinks fraternity houses tend to be in worse condition than sorority houses.

"It's the fact that the fraternities are much smaller than sororities and tend to get a little bit more crazy, and just the pure testosterone causes a little more mayhem," he said.

Bekah DeWitt, president of Kappa, said she and her sorority sisters moved into the house when it was under construction, and the quality of the house is much better now. She said the back patio and the expanded dining room to accommodate 170 women for dinner increased the comfort.

"It's great. I don't know if it's great because of what we have or just because it's great," she said.

Tatro said the only complaints he hears about living in a greek house is the financial commitment, and stringent house rules. Still, he said, he hears much more criticism about the residence halls and is glad to live in his fraternity house.

"It's a good experience," he said. "It's too much fun."

OFF-CAMPUS HOUSING

Snead's largest problem with off-campus housing — not enough — is apparent in the lack of lower cost-range housing for low-income families, moderate income families and married couples. A lack of available land also contributes to the problem.

"There has not been a large number of apartment complexes built in the last five years," he said. "There is a pent-up demand for that."

Ockert Fourie, senior planner for long range for the city, said almost 57 percent of Manhattan's housing is rental housing. Even though student housing is the predominant demand in Manhattan, Fourie said higher density housing proposals — such as the duplexes that have been constructed in the older neighborhoods — produce complaints from many Manhattan residents.

"A lot of the neighborhoods don't really approve of those. 'Not in my backyard' issue kind of comes up," he said.

Werring said this mentality is not fair to students, as they should have the right to live wherever they want.

"We want students to be a part of Manhattan because it brings in the money, but we don't want students living in my neighborhood,' and that gets confused with the idea of 'It should be Kansas State's responsibility to be building more campus housing so all those students, they will have to be living on campus and not in my neighborhood."

"I don't believe that to be the real issue. I believe students should have the right to participate in the community in which they live. Even Bruce Snead, in his Collegian editorial, said that it's very important that students become involved in civic responsibility. And, I believe that."

Still, he said, community participation includes choices of housing in that community, as there are a lot of students who don't want to live on campus.

"Students should have the right to live where they want to live. The issue becomes more of the city's problem — they've got to figure out different ways for development."

Snead and Fourie both said the city and the university should work together to solve the offcampus housing issue, and Werring said he agrees to a point.

"There's collaboration in a civic way. The whole building part of it — I think it's those issues that don't revolve around the students as much as the community at large, and what they're doing for economic development to bring in more families and construct housing. That push for housing for families is something that developers have to decide upon."

SOLUTION

Greek housing is in good condition, greek sources say. The residence halls, along with the Jardine project, will house those who want to live on campus, Werring said. He said perhaps the Jardine project will alleviate some off-campus housing issues, as students who favor the off-campus living style could choose to live in that same type of lifestyle, only on campus.

Werring said the university has a master plan to use land for classroom spaces, research facilities and support structures rather, than for housing. He said the possible available land is not located near enough to campus anyway.

"Once you start building structures a mile off campus, it's no longer part of the core, and then the mission of on-campus housing changes. Then all you become is just landlords. You aren't doing anything programmatically to help students to become engaged in the university experience. You become a bed-and-breakfast kind of thing. There's just no real need to do that."

With off-campus housing,
Snead said the city and the university will continue to face challenges of available land and development and redevelopment of land that is available. No matter what, he said, he wants all the stakeholders — including developers and the university — to play a part in increasing off-campus housing.

"The city wants to play a key role;" he said. "We all have a role to play."

Recreational Services Office Located in Peters Recreation Complex

Sports medicine and first aid program

Having a trainer close by is something that Director of sports medicine, Mike Frey, is also the users of the Rec Complex greatly appreciate. Recreational Services offers a sports medicine and first aid program for intramurals and other activities at the Recreation Complex. The Intramural Sports Medicine Program is made possible through partnership between Lafene Health Center and K-State Recreational Services. Basic services provided include: first aid, basic athletic taping, injury evaluation/prevention with referral for secondary medical evaluation if needed and equipment/medical supply sales. This service is free of charge and funded through the student activity fee that is paid at registration. Athletic trainers are available at all intramural team and meet sport activities. on site to oversee services provided by student athletic training students. Graduate Assistant athletic trainers who provide coverage for intramural events, taping, and injury evaluations are currently or are in the process of becoming certified with the National Athletic Trainers Association (NATA) and are registered with the State of Kansas Board of Healing Arts.

The sports medicine and first aid program is a great service to students. So, remember the next time you have an injury or need an ankle taped at the Rec, remember the Recreational Services sports medicine/first aid program!

Intramurals are a big hit in the spring

With the semester winding down and co-rec groups. Men generally compete in Christmas break approaching, sports fans have an opportunity to start getting in shape for the two biggest intramural team sports in the spring: basketball and softball. Basketball is the biggest team sport that the Recreational Services intramural program offers. "We had 300 teams compete last > year," said Steve Martini, associate director/intramurals. "We start on Sunday and play through Thursday nights." Along with basketball, softball is another popular spring sport that starts after spring break. The intramural program offers a wide variety of individual, meet and team sports. Intramural sports are scheduled competitive and recreational activities. Activities are offered for men, women and three divisions: fraternity, residence hall, or independent and all women compete in one division. "Intramurals are great and competitive, and most play with a group of friends," said Martini. Besides participating in intramurals, one can participate by officiating. Officiating can be a great way to get involved and there are many benefits. You will be paid for all games worked, there are flexible hours, comprehensive training in any intramural sport that is available, and there is an opportunity to advance and earn semester pay increases through hard work. So, get ready and spring into the coming semester by getting involved with intramurals. They are a great way to get to know people and to stay in shape!

My Favorite Workout

Aaron Smith, a junior from Topeka, Kansas, feels like the Rec is his second home. Smith, a digital arts major, comes to the Rec when he feels like relieving stress. "I am infatuated with working out," said Smith. "It is a huge stress reliever for me." Smith comes to the Rec alone or with friends, depending on the pace he wants to set. When Smith works out, he usually does a little bit of everything. "I usually warm up for 15 minutes by running or doing the stair stepper, and then I lift 1 to 2 hours," said Smith. Smith's favorite exercise is usually whatever he is doing that day. "Usually Abs is a challenge, though," said Smith. Several things keep bringing Smith back to the Rec. He feels like the Rec is a big stress reliever, and that people are always willing to help. "There is a family atmosphere here," said Smith. "At least it is set up to be a family-like atmosphere." Smith stays motivated to work out for many reasons. First, his day doesn't feel complete if he doesn't work out, and there is a challenge to keeping a good routine. "Whenever I take a break, it makes me want to come back and work even harder," said Smith. Smith has been coming to the Rec for a year and a half consistently and two years all together. His advice for other Rec goers? "Keep doing what you're doing," said Smith. "Exercise is a good habit, and live a healthy life and keep your mental healthiness up." Smith added, "Live your life to the fullest."

Who's Who at the Rec

When Luke Moore, a senior from Hiawatha, Kansas, wanted to work at the Rec, he thought officiating was a good idea. He wanted to stay involved with the sports that he played in high school, and he wanted to learn the aspects of each game. Moore, now an intramural supervisor, is in his 2nd year working for Recreational Services. He was promoted to intramural supervisor after working as an official. Moore, an Agriculture Economics major, likes working at the Rec as an intramural supervisor because of the people he deals with. "I have learned to deal with many different people, and also I like meeting new people," said Moore. "I have definitely learned some people skills." Moore's responsibilities as an intramural supervisor include: game organization and administration, training and supervision of officials, safety, prevention and treatment of accident situations, field preparation, field/court security, equipment and personnel management, and program facilitation. Moore's career plans include traveling and finding a job. "When I graduate, I want to start off by traveling and then find a job in the Ag Econ field that I will like," said Moore.

Campus pranks raise safety concerns

BY DANA STRONGIN

Kansas State Collegian

The October panty raid of Pi Beta Phi by five members of the Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity was the source of jokes, but in many ways, pranks are no laughing matter for the K-State greek system.

Officials of the police, the law and the greek system agree that pranks have negative implications for members, houses and the entire system all at the same time.

When asked to discuss pranks and details of the panty raid, several of those involved chose not to comment, citing the desire to move on.

These individuals said they did not wish to contribute to any further discussion of the raid. The prank already had enough affect on their houses, they said.

"It was a very unpleasant event," Bill Muir, ATO chapter adviser, said.

"Those kinds of things should be scaled back, if not limited," he said, "They have consequences."

The raid did have its consequences for the ATO's involved. Early in the morning of Oct. 7. five members were arrested for aggravated burglary, and one also was arrested for DUI.

This prank is not Manhattan's first to involve the police. Incidents involving greek pranks happen every year or every couple of years, said Capt. Gary Grubbs, leader of the investigations division for Riley County Police Department.

"It is a problem that shouldn't bethere are drastic criminal charges, such as in this case," he said. "Aggravated burglary has several consequences.

Grubbs said the pranks need to end, and students should consider the affects their actions might have.

"The form of these things appears to be traditional, and the students think in terms of them just being college pranks," he said. "But those actions are serious criminal offenses, and there are serious consequences if students are caught and arrested."

The five students involved in the raid might not remain under the charge of aggravated burglary, which is a felony, said Bill Kennedy, Riley County Attorney.

"The sorority requested that I not file charges," he said. "Instead, they are drawing up a program, a protocol. Among other things, the young men will have to talk to next year's pledges about what happens to people who do things like what they are accused of doing."

Kennedy said that if the students agree to the program, they have to complete all requirements within two years. If they do not fulfill their responsibilities by that time. he will refile the charges.

The fraternity also has taken action in response to the arrests, said Muir.

"We have made corrective measures." he said.

The prank appeared to be tied to some sort of tradition. Kennedy said.

"It became obvious as this case proceeded that it was considered the thing to do when you get to K-State - to go inside of the living quarters of the opposite sex at some inopportune time. It is like a rite of passage," he said.

Kennedy said the case showed him the true extent of greek pranks.

"It is one thing to go run around and have fun at 3 Saturday afternoon," he said. "But, it is another thing to sneak into a residence in the wee morning hours."

"This old fogey doesn't approve," he said. The panty raid occurred after a series of pranks already had begun between the two houses. Fraternities and sororities are grouped together during All-University were partners. Muir said the houses already had been involved in pranks, including TP-ing and using shoe polish on windshields. "It was building support and camaraderie for Homecoming, and it did a great job of it." he said.

Muir said the five students, who were new members, might have misinterpreted the use or purpose of the pranks.

"Maybe the new members saw these pranks and thought it was acceptable to do something their own way," he said.

Muir said he thinks the situation escalated because officers in both houses were out of town receiving awards. "There was a vacuum in leadership in both houses," he said. "Freshmen and sophomores were involved."

"The cold brisk air hitting your face while riding down main street - hey, how much more festive can you get?" Breadbasket volunteers are using the money to fill winter baskets with holiday meats and side items.

Bramhall said she enjoys watching the community coming together for such a good cause. The carriage rides really add some nostalgic moments for those who donate,

"The only way it could get more Christmasy would be instead of a carriage, for the horses to be pulling you on a sled while it was snowing," she said. "In so many different ways, it gets people in the mood to help out."

Manhattan Mainstreet, a downtown non-profit organization, is coordinating the rides. Carrie Ohm, executive director, said similar rides in Kansas City, Mo., can cost people between $40 and $100.

Since there are few carriage services in Kansas, Manhattan residents should take advantage of this unique and free opportunity. Ohm said. While enjoying the ride, passengers have a fun can acquaint themselves with some of the newer businesses along Poyntz.

Downtown is definitely a neat place to be during the holidays," she said. "With the lights and the holiday store displays, it is a good draw to the area while being able to collect and give money back to the less fortunate."

Ron Roller of Triple R Carriage Service has been in the business for 20 years. Besides weddings and group fundraisers, he and his family drive passengers in their horsedrawn carriage down Poyntz to help raise money for the Mayor's Holiday Food and Fund Drive.

This is Roller's fourth year of assisting with the Poyntz rides and said this is the first time that so many people have participated that he has to take breaks to rest the six horses and himself.

During the carriage ride open house event Nov. 29, he weaved more than 400 people in and out of Poyntz traffic to raise money for the cause.

Officer Wilson "Alex" Johnson, 56, had worked for the Junction City Police Department for 18 years. The suspect has been identified as Carlos Antioni Cobbs, 23, of Junction City, according to a press release from the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

Johnson was responding to a domestic disturbance call to help a victim recover her children from an apartment. Cobbs had taken the children from a babysitter. The officer went to the apartment when the suspect shot and killed him at approximately 4:30 a.m., according to the

After killing Johnson, Cobbs came out of the apartment and fired at least one shot at the backup officer who was arriving on the scene. The backup officer was not injured.

Cobbs then retreated to the apartment and apparently fatally shot himself.

Jury selection commences in teen-age murder trial

WICHITA - Jury selection began Monday in the case of a Wichita teenager accused of shooting his girlfriend and three other people to death.

Cornelius Oliver, 19, is charged with four counts of capital murder in the Dec. 7, 2000, shooting deaths of his girlfriend, Raeshawnda Wheaton, 18; her roommate, Odessa Ford, 17; Ford's cousin, Quincy Williams, 17 and Jermaine Levy, 19. If convicted, Oliver could face the death penalty.

Before jury selection began Monday. Judge Joseph Bribiesca denied a defense request to move the trial to Kansas City. Jury selection is expected to take two to Stories of a turbulent relationship between Wheaton and Oliver are expected to be a significant part of the prosecution's case this week in Sedgwick County District Court.

Yvette Oliver, Oliver's mother, has maintained her son's innocence, claiming that his friend Earl Bell II fired the purthat killed the teens.

Bell is charged with first-degree murder as an accomplice and faces life in prison at his mal next month.

FBI director might alter divisions to battle terror

WASHINGTON, D.C. - FBI Director Robert Mueller is poised to announce a reorganization to strengthen the bureau's ability to fight terrorism.

Mueller is expected to dismantle the FBI's investigative services division. which does analysis and threat assessments, and redeploy the section's analysts to the FBI's counterterrorism, criminal, national security and other divisions.

The investigative services division was formed two years ago under Mueller's predecessor, Louis Freeh. The move was part of a restructuring to shore up the bureau's ability to identify and prevent terrorism and other crimes, rather than investigating crimes or attacks after they have occurred.

Analysts who pore through information collected in investigations were consolidated into one division. Agents say the system left divisions bereft of analysts to assist on individual cases.

Many FBI agents now based in Washington would be shifted to field offices under the reorganization.

Supreme Court not taking Yonkers, NY, housing case

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Supreme Court refused to interfere with a courtordered housing desegregation plan for Yonkers, N.Y., The action Monday leaves intact the latest attempt to integrate the city's neighborhoods.

With litigation over Yonkers discrimination in its third decade, the state's fourth-largest city contended the newest remedy improperly substituted a planfavoring minorities for one that opened housing markets to all residents.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals approved the latest plan last lanuary, some 16 years after a federal judge concluded that Yonkers intentionally segregated its housing and public schools.

The first court-ordered desegregation plan was approved in 1986, and the current case challenges the latest revision.

'Many of these children don't get the same advantage as other children, and they aren't read to a lot," O'Neil said. "This program promotes literacy and the importance of books."

The Angel Tree Book Project is a charity project that the Union Bookstore has done for at least six years.

The 100 names on the tree this year were gathered from the Flint Hills Breadbasket. Each angel on the tree has the name of a child and his or her age. The program makes it easy and not too expensive for people to get involved, O'Neil said.

"When you pick a name off the tree and buy a book here at the bookstore you get a 25 percent discount. We wrap the present, put it under the tree and replace the angel with a star." O'Neil

Tighter airline security planned for holidays

BY ALYSON RALETZ Kansas State Collegi

Airplane passengers who plan to bring gift-wrapped packages onto their flights this holiday season should mail them ahead of time because they will not be allowed through security checkpoints,

Kansas City International officials If it is necessary to bring presents, passengers should pack gift bags and wrapping paper separately in their checked luggage, said Joe McBride, spokesman for Kansas City Aviation Department. "Security won't let any item by if it can't identify it." McBride said. "Unless they want their packages unwrapped at the checkpoints, they really need to ship them to their destinations ahead of time."

Besides unwrapped packages, any knives or scissors and sports equipment including ski poles, baseball bats and golf clubs, will not be allowed as carry-on items. according to Federal Aviation. Administration regulations.

Passengers should pack necessary papers, jewelry, cash or other valuables in their carry-on bags.

Even though pagers, laptops and cellular phones are allowed as carryon items, the Kansas City Aviation Department advises travelers to pack them in checked luggage since inspecting the items slows down the check-in process.

"This is all to create a safer environment than we had Sept. 11," McBride said. "All of these regulations are also part of a large effort to make the public feel more at ease when flying."

Since Dec. 23 and 24 typically are the busiest travel days besides Thanksgiving, he said, it is important the public feels as safe as possible. These regulations show the airports are doing everything in their power to protect travelers, he

Jack Oviatt, professor of geology, is flying with nine students to Death Valley, Calif., to study vegetation this holiday season. The Department of Geology has been planning the trip since August and never has thought about canceling it because of airline safety, Oviatt

"Canceling was never a consideration," he said. "There doesn't seem to be anything to be concerned with. We don't have any qualms with flying. I feel safe."

He said he has discussed airline security with the students attending the trip and does not anticipate any problems with their personal items.

The group is, however, planning to camp in Death Valley and has to bring some hefty camping and sporting equipment on the airplane, he said. A lot of camping gear is packed in such a way that it is difficult to identify all of the present items.

He said he will contact the airline ahead of time to make sure the group will be following all guidelines.

"We just hope we don't get to the airport and have to completely unpack all of our gear and slow everything down," he said.

*No knives, scissors or cutting instruments of any size will be allowed in the security area. These items may be transported only in checked baggage.

*Airline passengers are limited to one carry-on bag and one personal bag. cated or disruptive passengers will not be allowed to travel.

*Do not make jokes about explosives or weapons. Such remarks, known as utterances, are taken seriously and are cause for arrest.

*Be prepared to remove your laptop from its travel case so that both can be X-rayed *Travelers are subjected to random baggage searches at the ticket counters, security checkpoints and before boarding the aircraft. *Be prepared to show a government-issued photo ID. A passenger may be asked to produce this ID at other stages of the boarding process.

*Be patient with customer and security agents who are assisting passengers. These agents are experiencing procedural changes in the way they conduct their business

*No one without a ticket will be allowed beyond the security checkpoint, Provisions will be made for parents who need to meet unaccompanied minors, for disabled persons and those with special needs.

The following ARE allowed to be transported in carry-on baggage: *Walking canes and umbrellas once inspected to ensure prohibited items are not

*Tweezers

*Eyelash curlers *All of the items listed above are allowed on board an aircraft by the FAA, but the airline has the right to reject any of these items. Most airlines have set higher security standards than required by he FAA.

The following items are NOT allowed through security checkpoints and must be placed in, or transported as, checked baggage or risk confiscation:

*Cutting instruments of any kind, including carpet knives and box cutters. Any device with a folding or retractable blade, ice picks, straight razors and metal nail files.

She said she feels safe traveling during the holidays and wishes everyone would recognize the airline and airport efforts.

Issues for candidates arise as student body elections near

my

view

Matt Killingsworth

The conversations already have begun. As this year comes to an end, men and women on campus are already discussing possible runs for student government positions. From student body president to Fine Arts. Council, student leadership will go through its annual metamorphosis this March.

Those discussions could lead to the campaign issues discussed next semester. Sadly, during my five years at K-State, the rotations of the same issues have reared their ugly heads each and

The aforementioned usual suspects of parking, advising and the increase of student fees now have hit their point of redundancy. Student leaders might have some input on the process, but to think that one student senator is going to increase parking is unrealistic

The solutions to these problems are simple, so I'll go ahead and get them out of the way first.

Parking The easiest solution that no one wants to talk about is less spots and higher costs for parking passes. If we upgrade the stadium shuttle system, adding at least one or two more buses. there would be no reason to drive to campus There are people who will drive when they live one block from campus. You can't fight that with a parking garage or more spots. The more spots there are, the more people will try to park on campus.

Cut the south half of the parking in front of the K-State Student Union and behind Waters Hall, creating more green space on campus. When people complain they can't drive to class, my only other recommendation would be to develop a valet parking system because until then the lazy folks on our campus still will complain. We're an university, not a mall.

Advising

The university is working on this one. The survey enrolling students had to fill out is a good indication that someone out there is trying to collect information to fix the problem. I wonder aloud if they also are collecting information from the advisers about their frustrations dealing with students who cancel meetings, show up illprepared or are rude and apathetic about their college education. The job of a college professor is to teach, not to be my friend or to hold my hand through the enrollment process. If we want real advisers, hire real advisers. Don't push this burden off on professors who already have to deal with low wages and a constantly increasing student

hody class size

Student fees This one's easy. Let's jack up all of our fees so in-state students realize how much they could be paying for such a quality education. K-State ranks ninth out of the 11 public universities in the Big 12, according to the Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education. We increased our fees 11 percent from last year to this year, and we still are cheaper than most schools in our conference. I feel sympathetic for non-residents because they pay four times what a resident pays, yet Kansans complain when tuition continues to increase. Tuition should be increased to fund better programming and building remodeling like the wonderful job done on Seaton Hall. We will also need more access to and better awareness of scholarships on campus. There are hardworking students putting themselves through college and an increase in fees means less money in their pockets. Weneed to work to make K-State better without making it harder for students to

Now, that those issues are out of the way, I did have one idea that I want to throw in the arena.

The A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications needs to revolt from the tyranny of the College of Arts and Sciences and become a full college department. Having IMC as a branch of the College of Arts and Sciences is like architecture, construction sciences and engineering all as schools in a College of Buildings.

Journalism is neither an art nor a science, and as a college, we still would have more students than the College of Architecture, Planning and Design. Beyond the fact that being our own college would increase programs and resources for JMC students and it's about time we had our own shirt in the K-State Student Union Bookstore

I also take umbrage to the election process as a whole. We usually have only 15 percent of the student body vote on campus elections. If the other 85 percent of students don't care. that's fine. But then, those students call into the Campus Fourum and complain about their opinions not being represented.

The democratic election process we have at K-State is a very special right. Yet we squander that right when we keep rehashing the same issues year after year, letting student government officials pad their resumes and accomplish little during their time in office. Candidates need to stop hiding behind issues they have no power over and get down to addressing students' needs.

This year, vote and let your voice he heard. If an issue you feel is important isn't being covered, speak up. If you don't, I guarantee you it will not change.

Graduates should remember lessons, good times at K-State State have shaped you as a person. From

Dear December graduates.

You'll be leaving next week. I bet some people hear the date of your commencement and say, "You're graduating WHEN?" like you're some kind of bizarre freak for finishing in December. There's not much hype surrounding your graduation - a lot of people don't even know about it.

But that doesn't change. the fact you're departing. You've spent four or so years of your life at K-State. What will you have to show for it in a week when you walk across the platform and shake hands with someone much more important than yourself? The obvious answer is a huge debt and a piece of paper showing you have managed to stumble through all of your classes without giving up or making deadly mistakes. Although this might be true, you also will have a few other things more valuable than all the money and pieces of paper in the world. When you leave K-State, you will take with you knowledge, experience and great memories. This triad of intangibles is the essence of university life. If you miss out on any one of them, you have missed a wonderful opportunity to grow as a person.

Acquiring knowledge is one of the most important purposes for attending a university. The University General Education program has ensured that you, the gradu> ating senior, have at least a modicum of knowledge about yourself, the world around you and the human condition. If you keep an open mind and are not afraid to always question what you have been taught. this information will serve you well in your future life.

Despite early mornings, late nights. struggles and dismal failures, you have triumphed in your studies and avoided becoming a victim of academic Darwinism. As you enter the next phase of your life. continue to learn all you can. It often has been said that knowledge is power. That's not quite true - actually, brownies are power. But knowledge is really good too.

While attending K-State, you have had the opportunity to do any number of instructive and really cool things. You might have gone abroad, taken an internship with a multinational company or been a desk editor at the school newspaper. You might have had the time of your life doing these activities. On the other hand, maybe you just wished for a fortuitous meteor to fall on your head, thus stifling your pitiful existence. Regardless, you obtained some valuable experience: Most of you also gained vital social experience. Whether you lived in a greek living facility, a residence hall, or an apartment, you almost undoubtedly learned to live with others without fighting and complaining. If you did not, I wish you the best of luck in your all-but-inevitable divorce settlements.

By working with others on class projects and group assignments, you learned how to function in the business world. You learned that looking out for ol' No. Isometimes is the worst possible thing you can do. You learned that everyone has to give in order for the group to succeed.

Never stop cooperating — if you do. your chances of survival in the real world are about the same as mine of getting a date within the next 10 years (that is, slimmer than Kate Moss on an all-water diet).

Memories are the longest-lasting of the three most important things you will take with you when you leave. It probably seems like you just arrived a few months ago, a young and impressionable freshman. During your stay here, though, you have experienced so much that you are a completely changed person.

The events that have taken place at K-

Don't think the next stage of your life will be even freer and more laid back - it won't be. During the four or so years you were here, you were free from worry (trust me; I talk to my parents - you really didn't have much reason to be concerned). From now on, you have to behave at least somewhat responsibly or suffer the consequences. Your experiences here formed your personality, and you probably won't change a whole lot after you get into the For better or for worse, real world. that's the way it is. So, graduating seniors, I salute you. May your future life contain more joy than sorrow. May you never forget the most important things you learned in school. May all of your brownies be low in fat and calories. envy you for finally being done with your studies and advancing to the next stage of your life. More than that, though, I pity you. Good luck.

Senior citizens create crafts for annual Santa's City event

BY MICHAEL WATSON

Kansas State Collegian

Every Thursday, a group of retired and senior citizens get together to make crafts, share ideas and show and tell their projects.

Connie Stout, retired Farm. Bureau employee, said she put 35 hours of work into a couple of handmade crafts for Santa's City, the Retired and Senior Volunteer Program's annual fund-raiser.

"I spend many hours doing my needlework," Stout said. "Some women do more, some do less. We do it not only because we like doing it, but also because it helps raise money.

Stout said she enjoys getting together with the volunteers to work

With Santa's City right around the corner, she is putting finishing touches on some of her projects. "I'm making jelly jars with magnets and pins made out of wood." Santa's City is a gift shop for children to buy gifts for family and friends. Handmade crafts made by volunteers will be sold from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday at the City Auditorium.

Stout said, while K-State products are a good seller, there are other goods at the store as well. There are Christmas items, coasters > and different novelty items. She said the volunteer group includes a lot of women who crochet and knit. She said there are many handmade items

Prices are marked for a child's budget, from 25 cents to $10. Stout said the store is popular for kids year after year. Fresh ideas are needed to provide different gifts each Christmas. She said ideas for men's gifts are especially needed.

Parents are asked not to shop with their children. Volunteers are there to help the children with their shopping lists and help them figure out what they can afford.

"It's exciting for them," Stout said. "They get gifts for their parents that will be a surprise.

Last year, Santa's City raised around $3,000. Merchandise was sold out by 1 p.m.

"We've been working hard because we sold out last year to bring more merchandise, but some of the women have had to quit," she

"We are always interested in getting more women. Last year, sorority girls said they would like to do crafts. They can donate crafts if they want to."

With things winding down with her projects, Stout said it is time to start thinking about baking for the bake sale that goes along with Santa's City.

"Then it's time to think about next year," she said. "We'll start sometime in the middle of February. Not only do the volunteers work on projects for Santa's City yearround, RSVP volunteers work on many other projects for the United Way including Meals on Wheels, a food delivery program for those in need, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce putting together convention packets for visitors, the genealogy library, tutoring children and the Ring-A-Day program, a telephone reminder and checkup

"When someone gets out of the hospital, they need a reminder to take their medicine." Lorí Bishop. executive director, said.

The volunteer coordinator will write down a couple of backup numbers and the volunteers will call to remind them to take their medicine. If nobody answers the telephone calls, somebody is sent to check on them.

"That happened once," Bishop

"We had a volunteer come back saying the person didn't answer the door. We called the police, and it turned out she had broken her hip. They do get contacted."

The number of volunteer hours varies for each volunteer. Some volunteers work one hour a week. and others work 30 hours a week. RSVP logs 90,000 hours of community service a year. Bishop said their goal is 100,000 hours this year.

"We have a variety of backgrounds, from pastors to teachers," Bishop said.

We cover every type of occupation. Volunteers can work within their profession or they can learn a new trade."

In late November, K-State's Army ROTC ranked 47 of 270 programs in the nation, placing it in the top 20th percentile and recording its highest rank ever.

Lt. Col. Art DeGroat, head of the Department of Military Science, said all energy has been placed in building the program in the last year and a half. Now the challenge is to sustain it and get into the top 10 percent.

"The top 20th percentile is tough for a land grant school in the middle of the country," DeGroat said. "Top 20-percent schools are strong because they are large schools - prestigious, private schools - with a much

The quality of the students and their commitment has enabled us to do this," he said.

Michael Smith, senior in advertising and Recondo Company Commander, said a highlight of his four years in Army ROTC has been Cadet Troop Leadership Training.

Another highlight was when Recondo placed second in Ranger Challenge at Camp Dodge, Iowa, in October. The event challenges cadets in military events such as riflery, weapon assembly and disassembly and orienteering. Other schools competing in the regional event were Creighton, the University of Kansas and Pittsburg State University.

Smith said one change he has seen with the program is motivation. He said cadets do what is best for the company.

The ROTC program has not always been this successful. Last year, the program ranked 240 of 270. Its average rank usually is in the 70th to 80th percentile. Changes in curriculum helped make the program successful, DeGroat said.

It puts students in charge of small groups, then move them to larger groups. Cadets then get feedback on their performance.

Peer learning activities, academic assistance, a physical fitness program and scholarships also are offered.

"We've made drastic changes in these programs," DeGroat said. "Generating scholarships allow for

"We can take students to work with world class training facilities," DeGroat said. "We have access to $28 million Blackhawk helicopter simulators. It comes with a vomit bag, it's so realistic. They get much better training and can outperform their peers at other schools."

Honorary colonels also have aided the success of the program. A colonel is a senior rank in the Army. Honorary colonels are K-State faculty and staff members who are not in the military who give advice for the direc-

he 2001 football season will end where success began for head coach Bill Snyder's team. Eight years removed from the team's first bowl appearance under Snyder in the 1993 Copper Bowl, the Wildcats will return to the valley of the sun for a matchip against the No. 18

Howl on Dec. 29. "We're certainly honored to have the opportunity to come back to Phoenix again and participate in a bowl game that really dates back from its inception with Kansas State University," Snyder said in a conference call Monday.

This year's contest figures to be closer than K-State's 52-17 win over Wyoming in 1993, though.

The Wildcats will enter the contest as winners of four of their last five games, including a 24-3 win over Missouri on Nov. 24 to clinch the school's ninth straight bowl appearance after four straight early season losses.

Syracuse also will travel to Phoenix with plenty of success to its name. After beginning the season with two straight defeats, the Orangemen won nine of their final 10 contests, including a 22-14 win over No. 4 Virginia Tech on Oct. 27 to finish the year.

Both teams' resiliency after difficult starts was a main selling point to the selection committee, who extended its official invitation to athletics director Tim Weiser and Snyder on Monday

"We think the matchup between K-State and Syracuse in this year's game will provide the excitement that I know we're all excited about," said Kevin Hickey, a representative for the Insight.com Bowl.

The two schools also share a link to Arizona by way of the 1997 Tostitos Fiesta Bowl. Then. No. 9 K-State capped off its best season ever with a 35-18 win over No. 14 Syracuse in Tempe, Ariz., and finished with a 11-1 record - the Wildcats' first-ever 11-win season.

But those connections aside, Snyder said this year will be much different.

"I think it's certainly a real challenge for our football team to play against Syracuse," Snyder said. "What I know about Syracuse at this particular point in time would certainly indicate a tremendously fine football team.

"I've also had great respect for Paul Pasqualoni and his coaching efforts at Syracuse, and having played them several years ago in the Fiesta Bowl did nothing but enhance that perception."

In fact, the Orangemen have put forth a great perception this season under Pasqualoni and probably will come into the contest favored over

"He is a talented football coach and they will be an extremely well-coached football team," Snyder added. "They will be a team that plays extremely hard

The hotline will reopen at 8 a.m. Tuesday through Friday, and the package will include hotel accommodations, game tickets, pregame tickets, a welcome reception and all transportation needs. The packages can be purchased with or without charter air service to the bowl city.

K-State fans have earned quite a reputation for attending bowl games. and Snyder said he expected to see another big turnout in Phoenix this year.

"Kristy has always been a strong rider for us," assistant coach Jodi Pike said. "On Saturday, she really came through for us."

Reynolds tied for high-point honors on Sunday, helping K-State tie Oklahoma State for first place. The junior from Overland Park, Kan., finished second in both open fences and open flat for the Cats.

The weekend wins brought K-State within one point (114) of regional leader Oklahoma State (115) with three shows remaining. The Cats return to action Feb. 15-17 at Texas A&M.

Andrew Boie, sophomore in computer sciences, is a techno disc jockey and part of the Techno Justice League.

Boie said he has played about nine raves, countless house parties, a now-defunct weekly radio show and a monthly show at the Spark Bar in Kansas City, Mo. The music grabbed Boie's attention because of the way DJs manipulated sounds that already existed to form their own music.

Deep, minimal and hard techno as well as tech-house are the styles Boie said he works in the most. The style is more appealing for him than other forms of electronica such as trance because it allows for more creative control over the music and sounds harder and more experimental, he said.

Boie's next Spark Bar show will be Dec. 27, and he said that for information about him as well as performance dates, people can visit http://andrewboie.web.com.

KU student writes children's book to help youth deal with recent tragedy

BY BECKY FISCHER

A magical, underwater mermaid village is Leigh Kelly's sanctuary of safety.

Kelly, senior in psychology at the University of Kansas, is the author of the book, "Safe Space."

"A safe space is a place you go to when you're scared or anxious," Kelly said. "Everyone's is different. You go there to calm down and then emerge back into the real world."

A safe space is what Kelly said she needed after the attacks on the World

I felt so negative, and I was just sitting there, glued to the TV," she said. "I had to break away and do something, so I started to write.

What she wrote were poems based on her idea of a safe space, Kelly said, which originated from her psychology background at KU.

Visualizations, containment, cognitive restructuring — these are all different theories on dealing with stressful situations," Kelly said. "They're sort of like Stuart Smalley's 'I'm good enough, I'm smart enough, and gosh darn it. people like me.' They're ways of refocusing.

is the mother of an 8-year-old son and 14-year-old daughter, Kelly said she was especially interested in getting the method out to children.

Then she was asked by her friend, DeAnna Thompson, fifth-grade teacher at Northview Elementary School in Olathe, to teach her class some tips on into a book "The text is like one long poem," she said. "It's Dr. Seuss meets Freud."

The book needed something other than text, and Kelly said she asked her friend, Theresa Kelley, to illustrate it.

Illustrations help children learn about safe spaces, Kelley said.

"I painted a variety of images of people's reactions to Sept. 11," Kelley said. "One image is of a group of people looking up with sadness on their faces. One is of a little girl staring at the TV. sitting on top of the world. all alone, crying. These are ideas children can identify with.

"Her mom had worked in the Pentagon, and she lost a teacher and some students in the plane crashes in New York," she said. "It was a weird coincidence that she ended up at the school where we were doing the project."

Kelly said she also thought the move was a strange coincidence.

"It was good to have a student who had experienced it herself," Kelly said. "We had to hold production for her drawing, but it was worth it."

Kelly and Kelley now are on a road trip to New York City, and they're promoting the book along the way.

"One of our reasons for doing this is to go to Washington, D.C., to give the student's old classmates some of the books," Kelly said. "Hopefully, it'll help

Ultimately, that's what Kelly wants children to know

"Kids are ready for this," Kelly said. "Life is full of obstacles, and it's good to learn how to deal with them in a healthy way while you're young. The use of a safe space can produce happier, healthier

"over," Muir said.

Pranks do have an effect on the way others view the greek system, Muir said.

"Until a couple of years ago. I thought they were mostly harmless," he said. "Quite frankly, pranks can be very harmless and can cause no problem. Usually they are fine, they go back and forth. and nobody gets hurt."

Sometimes, however, pranks can go too far, Muir said.

"Too far is the point where there is damage, destruction or interference with sleep," he said. "It is the point where it is a problem not just for groups, but the system as a

Muir said he is seeing more of what he calls the harmful kinds of pranks than the harmless.

"There needs to be an evaluation of the whole thing, what is done between fraternities and sororities," he said.

Phil Stein, Interfraternity Council president, said pranks have a negative effect on the way others view fraternities. Lindsay Vogel, Panhellenic Council president. would not return phone calls.

"It is not a positive thing," he said. "It is an unfortunate problem because the occurrences are so isolated. It is random members, but they get linked to the entire greek

Stein said the difference between other students and fraternity members is their house affilia

"Things happen. People live in residence halls and off-campus. and they TP and stuff," he said. "But, fraternity members are all associated with one student organization.

"It is not good public relations for us, and people have to recognize that it is linked to a group of people who have no part in it,"

Because of this linkage, Stein said the public should not jump to conclusions.

"Everyone that reads the paper and hears about it through gossip should take it with a grain of salt. It is blown out of proportion," he said. "Just because it happened to one or two members does not mean that the organization approves of or condones that

There are no specific rules or policies concerning pranks in the greek system, Stein sald.

"It has to be a chapter-endorsed event," he said. "Usually, pranks involve random people thinking it would be fun.'

Stein said there have been measures taken to curb pranks.

"Last year, IFC made a group statement to try and address it. The pranks were getting so numerous and frequent," he said.

"The chapter alumni and housing core got involved because they have financial stakes and own the houses," Stein said. "They were worried that it would get to the point that vandalism would be a problem and get too serious, so they tried to address it."

Stein said IFC has not had to deal with a situation in which a prank has reached an unacceptable

"We would have to cross that bridge when we get to it," he said. "The members would have to deal with officers, and we would have to find a way to handle it."

Stein said IFC has little control when students are arrested for

"In a case like this one, it is out of our hands," he said. "The police step in, and it becomes a much more serious issue.

Stein said he is concerned with the public's reaction to these more serious pranks.

People become reactive about what happens," he said. "You can't control everyone all the time.

Those involved with the greek system agree that pranks like the ATO panty raid do not reflect well upon their organizations.

It's been a learning experience for us," Muir said, "but it is one you hope doesn't occur again."

Bush cautions Americans over holidays

BY RON FOURNIER

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. -President Bush put America on high alert Monday for possible terrorist strikes during the holiday season after U.S. intelligence officials reported an increase in credible threats.

Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge, standing in for Attorney General John Ashcroft to announce the third government alert since the Sept. 11 suicide hijackings, said the information does not point to a specific target or type of attack, either in the United States or abroad.

"The convergence of information suggests, ladies and gentlemen of America, you know, we're at war. Be on alert," Ridge told reporters in the White House briefing room.

"Now is not the time to back off," Ridge said, echoing a warning he issued the nation's governors in a conference call Monday.

The FBI put 18,000 law enforcement agencies on the highest alert because of threats culled from intelligence sources across the globe, he said.

Ridge said the convergence of Christmas and Ramadan, the Islamic holy month that ends in mid-December, could be tempting to terrorists who have a history of striking during religious obser-

The Bush administration issued its first alert Oct. 11, followed by a one-week advisory Oct. 29. Ever since, Ridge, the president and Ashcroft have warned Americans to remain vigilant.

In the last AMERICA several days, intelligence and law enforcement officials reported increased threats, A U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the threat comes from people with links to al-Qaeda, the terrorist network headed by Osama bin Laden and suspected in the Sept. 11 attacks that killed almost 3,500.

The threat is not tied to the weekend attacks and retaliation in Israel and may not be a direct response to events in Afghanistan. as al-Qaeda is known to planattacks far in advance, the official said.

"The sources are more credible and, let me just say, the decibel level is higher as they talk about potential attacks," Ridge said,

White House officials said the level of concern Monday was not any greater than for the two previous alerts.

They said Ridge pushed for the alert because of the new information and out of the apprehension that public, politicians and police were getting complacent.

The further removed we get from Sept. 11. I think, the natural tendency is to let down our guard," Ridge said. "Unfortunately, we cannot do that."

Americans can help by reporting suspicious activity to police, Ridge said.

comes in the middle of the holiday shopping season, an important time for recession-weary "A terrorism alert is not a signal to stop life. It is a call to be vigilant, to know that your government is on high alert and to add your eyes and ears to our efforts to find and stop those who want to harm us." Ridge said. He said the alert was intended to "remind our citizens, no matter where you live - it can be a big state with a dense population, or you can be a smaller state with a lot of rural communities - we have no way of assuring or guaranteeing or pinpointing where the terrorists will attack," he said.

Ridge made the announcement because Ashcroft was out of town. Bush has distanced himself from the alerts, which have been criticized for unduly alarming Americans.

Ridge offered little hope of finding the source of anthrax attacks that shook the nation in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 suicide hijackings over Washington. New York and Pennsylvania.

Evidence of trace anthrax in a postal center in Wallingford, Conn.: bolsters theories that the death of 94-year-old Ottilie Lundgren was a_ case of cross-contamination from the mail, Ridge said. But he said the theory is contradicted by other evidence.

He said there was no disagreement within the administration over whether to issue the alert. There was great debate before the first alerts.

"Over the last several days, our intelligence and law enforcement agencies have seen an increased volume and level of activity involving threats of terrorist attacks. The information we have does not point to any specific target either in America or abroad, and it does not outline any specific type of attack." Ridge said.

"However, the analysis who review this information believe the quantity and level of threats are above the norm and have reached a threshold where we should once again place the public on general alert, just as we have done on two previous accasions since Sept. 11," he said.

Ridge said that figuring out whether information is credible enough to merit an alert is an art, It's not a science.

"It would be so much easier. admittedly, if there were a little more specifics we could refer to," he said. "But there are not.

Pasqualoni accepted the other invitation Nov. 27, but stated that his team would rather have been playing elsewhere after linishing with nine wins and just one conference loss.

Snyder's ream, on the other hand, is thankful for the opportunity to be playing anywhere.

"I'm pleased that we've gotten here," Snyder said. "The season didn't progress as we had hoped, but we certainly believe that we have made some progress throughout the final stages of the season and we're just honored to have the opportunity to play there."

MIDEAST

declaration of war against terrorism Monday, and missile attacks on the West Bank and Gaza, are seen within the U.S. administration as a warning, not the start of all-out war with Arafat's Palestinian Authority.

Arafat still has a chance to rein in the terror groups, but it could be his last chance, a senior U.S. official told The Associated Press on Monday, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Engaged in its own struggle against international terror, the Bush administration decided after at least 26 Israelis were slain and hundreds injured by suicide bombers over the weekend that Palestinian terrorism will not get a "Terrorism has got to stop," Philip Reeker, a State Department spokesman, said.

"You can't pick and choose. And that's the message we are giving the Palestinians.

Similarly, Bush and his aides are endorsing Israel's right to defend itself, with limited qualification. Targeted assassinations of suspected terrorists, the latest of which occurred last Friday, still is considered beyond the pale.

Once the bombers struck in Jerusalem and Haifa, the United States abandoned its traditional evenhanded call for restraint and stopped imploring Israel not to provoke the Palestinians.

What has changed, the senior U.S. official said, was the depth of the violence committed against Israel and the U.S. commitment to punish terrorists and their supporters grounded in the Sept. 11 attacks in New York and Washington.

Secretary of State Colin Powell will assess where things stand in a meeting Tuesday in Bucharest with Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres. They will be in the Romanian capital for a meeting of the Organization for Cooperation and Security in Europe.

The big unanswered question as U.S. policy shifts is what the United States would do if Arafat fails to shut down Hamas and the Islamic Jihad, the two main terror groups in territory controlled by Arafat's Palestinian Authority.

Robert Satloff, executive director of the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, said, "What is lacking from U.S. policy right now is consequences for Arafat's refusal to fight terror."

In an interview Monday, Satloff said, "Time and again, administration officials have referred to Arafat's 'moment of truth,' without there being any repercussions for failing to meet the test."

Satloff said Bush should consider what his father did as president 11 years ago: suspend U.S. relations until Arafat acted against terrorism.

Richard Murphy, a former U.S. assistant secretary of state, said Arafat can do more to curb terrorist groups, although there are significant independent wildcatters within Islamic Jihad.

Israel has penetrated the groups so well it will know if determination stands behind Arafat's statements demanding a halt to terrorist attacks, Murphy, now with the private Council on Foreign Relations, said in an interview.

At the same time, Murphy said, a large number of Israelis and other people have concluded Arafat is irrelevant because he cannot or will not act against terrorists.

Judith Kipper, Middle East analyst at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, said she thinks Arafat could stop the terrorism. "But he cannot do it without constant American help and as part of a peace process," she

That is, Kipper said in an interview, Israel must do such things as ease tensions on the West Bank and end the economic siege of the Palestinians there.

Jack Rosen, president of the American Jewish Congress, and Phil Baum, executive director of the group, said the Bush administration was sending the only message that makes sense at this

That is, they said in a statement, "If you don't eliminate the terrorists, then you must be removed."

"Chairman Arafat has an obligation to make a 100 percent effort,"

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said as Israeli missiles slammed into the West Bank and

"The president's point of view is Israel is a sovereign power." Fleischer said. "Israel has a right to defend itself."

The administration's support is not open-ended.

While the war in Afghanistan is going the U.S. way, Arab members of the U.S.-led coalition are not being taken for granted.

Also, the administration wants to keep alive its hopes for renewed peace talks between Israel and the Palestinians, however dim they might be.

As a result, State Department spokesman Reeker said Monday that there was no green light asked for and no green light given for Israel's retaliatory attacks. "This is not a game of green light, red

Also, speaking for Powell, the spokesman said it's important all parties consider the repercussions of their actions and their impact on prospects for peace in the

As a result, all six Board of Regents schools are considering how much tuition will be raised at their schools next year

Since October, K-State administrators have been presenting their ruition hike proposals to students and faculty members at each college's student council meeting. The proposals range from a 3- to 27-percent increase each year for the next five years.

Other options include making monetary distinctions between the rest of campus and business and engineering students, implementing a $5 technology fee and charging students more money for taking courses above the 300 level.

Nothing will be finalized until March when administrators propose K-State's five-year plan to the Kansas Board of Regents.

COMPARISON TO OTHER KANSAS UNIVERSITIES

University of Kansas administrators are consid-ering three scenarios that would increase tuition anywhere between 15 and 62 percent this fall.

All three scenarios include an alternative option that only would increase new students' tuition, but by fall 2006, all KU students would have to pay the increased rates.

"From the feedback we have been cetting, the students seem to understand why KU needs to do this," said Lynn Bretz, director of KU university relations. "Paying higher per credit hour ensures the value of a KU degree.

MAdministrators are compiling student and faculty feedback from the college student council tuition presentations. Natural gas Natural gas prices reached an unnatural high last winter in the Midwest. However, according to a report issued by the Energy Information Administration in Washington, D.C., the average Midwest household will spend an average of $200 less per month on natural gas this winter.

lim Todaro, senior energy analyst for the Energy Information Administration (EIA) said supplies are up and demand is down for natural gas. This, coupled with mild temperatures nationwide, will keep prices relatively low all winter,

"The price won't spike to rates experienced last winter unless it gets extremely cold for a long. period of time," Todaro said.

In fact, if the temperature remains fairly mild, the price of natural gas should go down in January. This is due in part to an increase in supply from last year and a decrease in demand.

"It is really just economics. The economy is slow." Todaro said. "The demand for energy is down, and both U.S. and Canada supply is up."

Furthermore, natural gas is difficult to store, so companies are aggressively selling their supplies, which means less expense for the consumer.

This is welcome news to K-State students living off-campus. Carl Shaw, senior in psychology, purchased space heaters for his home in order to use the heater less and save on natural gas.

"We haven't ran the heat as much because of the high prices last year," Shaw said. Other students pay little attention to the price of utilities in order to live comfortably.

"I don't freeze to try and save money. I don't think the gas prices are going to get so high they are going to break me." said Jared Vilander, junior in management information systems.

The EIA findings show that students do not have as much to worry about this winter. The strength of the market can be demonstrated by the financial trouble of the Enron Corp., Todaro said. The company, which once had 20 percent of the energy market, is experiencing financial trouble. and a possible merger with rival Dynegy Inc.

The supply is good when 20 percent of the market disappears and there is no notable change in price," Todaro said.

Not only is the natural gas market down, but also the oil market is. Oil has been well under $20 a barrel for more than a month, Todaro said. Fuels play off each other, he said, and as long as the economy remains slow - creating a low demand for energy - natural gas prices will be affected accordingly.

U.S.-led force continues to attack Taliban

BY ROBERT BURNS The Associator Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld expressed confidence Tuesday that Afghan opposition forces would defeat the Taliban at their last stand in Kandahar, and he all but ruled out sending in the Marines to finish the job.

"We don't have any plans at the present time to be using U.S. forces in that way." Rumsfeld said. A U.S. soldier was wounded Tuesday during the fighting around Kandahar, the Taliban militia's southern stronghold, the U.S. Central Command said. The soldier was shot under the collarbone, but his injuries were not life-threatening, defense officials said. The soldier was working with one of the anti-Taliban groups surrounding Kandahar, anonymity. The wounded soldier was evacuated from Afghanistan and was in stable condition at a military hospital, the statement said. For weeks U.S. warplanes have been bombing Kandahar in support of anti-Taliban attackers. The supreme Taliban leader, Mullah Mohammed Omar, has instructed his people to hold out.

"Hiding in the city, the Taliban are in effect using the civilian population of Kandahar as shields," Rumsfeld said.

At a Pentagon news conference, Rumsfeld

John Banker already had made his decision.

One week before Sept. 11, Banker, senior in engineering, decided he would begin graduate school in January instead of starting a new job.

"It was kind of ironic. I decided right before everything hit the fan," he said. "I was getting it paid for, so I said 'Why not?'"

At K-State and nationwide, some graduates are facing an unfamiliar situation - a weak job market and a troubled economy.

Employers are expected to hire 19.7 percent fewer graduates than they did last year, according to a report released by the National Association of Colleges and Employers. Thirty percent of employers also plan to decrease college hires.

Graduate school has become one attractive alternative. There now are about 2,000 graduate students at K-State, but that could

"Historically, when there has been a downturn in the economy and jobs are not as plentiful, there is an increase in graduate school enrollment," said Carol Shanklin, assistant to the dean of graduate school.

Banker said many of his peers are opting to enroll in graduate school. The economy was one factor in Christopher Whitmer's decision to start graduate school. Whitmer, senior in mechanical engineering, will begin school at Iowa State University next semester. He said graduate school had more to offer than a job.

"Jobs are scarce right now," he said. "A year ago, a lot of people who are going to graduate school might have taken a job."

Dean of the College of Engineering Terry King said K-State is prepared to accommodate any increase. He said there has been speculation that there will be an increase, but so far, he hasn't seen anything significant.

"The worst that will happen is students might have to wait a couple of months," he said. "Right now, they're just saying they're not getting as many job offers."

Shanklin said many students who are having trouble finding a job will enroll in graduate school parttime and work parttime. This allows them to hold out until they get a better job offer, she said.

David Vruwink, assistant dean of the College of Business Administration, said he expected business enrollment to stay steady at about 125 students. There have been some inquiries into K-State's MBA program.

For students having trouble finding a job, he said, graduate school is a good way to stay

"Eventually, the economy will pick back up," he said. "If you can improve your credentials, it will widen your possibilities for relaunching your career."

Shanklin said students need to be aware of any requirements or prerequisites for graduate school. Many concentrations require the GRE or other tests.

Students also need to decide on an area of study, she said.

"They need to make sure that the discipline they're selecting will be supportive of what they want to do," she said. "Select a major that would be valued by future employers."

When it does, he and other students will be "In a year or two, it will make more sense," he said. "And I'll have another degree."

The economy will pick up, Whitmer said.

Mediator called in to settle KU's GTA contract dispute

LAWRENCE - A mediator will likely be called in to contract negotiations between the University of Kansas and its graduate teaching assistants.

The Graduate Teaching Assistants Coalition, which represents the 910 GTAs at KU, agreed Monday night to send the negotiations to the state Public Employee Review Board, which will appoint a mediator.

University officials indicated last month they planned to seek a mediator, saying there were "irreconcilable differences" between the two groups. Negotiators met for 90 minutes Monday, but couldn't agree on salaries.

The coalition representing the GTAs said it wanted to continue negotiating.

"We'd rather keep talking," said Robert Vodicka, chief negotiator for the coalition. "But if they say they don't want to talk, we can't make them talk."

The coalition proposed Monday that Kansas pay GTAs $11,000 for the first year of the three-year contract. followed by $12,000 and $13,000 the next two years. The university has proposed $7,000, $7,700 and $8,400.

The two sides have been negotiating on a three-year contract since September 2000. They remain under a contract negotiated in 1997.

coordinator, replaces Terry Allen, who was fired with three games left in his fifth-straight losing season. The Jayhawks have had six straight losing years in the rugged Big 12 Conference.

Before joining head coach Bob Stoops at Oklahoma three years ago, Mangino was an assistant for eight years at K-State. Known as a standout recruiter, he was the Sooners' offensive coordinator the past two years.

Athletic director Al Bohl, who was hired last summer to turn around the football program, fired Allen on Nov. 4 with three games remaining and replaced him with interim head coach Tom Hayes.

The Jayhawks finished 3-8, losing 59-0 to Texas and 49-7 to Iowa State under Hayes before closing out with a 27-14 win over Wyoming. Their only victory in the Big 12 was over Texas Tech.

Postal Service $1.7 billion in red for last fiscal year

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Postal Service ended its fiscal year $1.7 billion in the red.

Chief financial officer Richard Strasser blamed the loss on the declining economy and increased competition.

In addition, he said Tuesday that the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11 had caused a reduction in mail volume

The loss was for the 12 months that ended Sept. 30. The anthrax attacks through the mail began fater and will result in additional costs to the agency; Strasser said.

He told the postal Board of Governors that the agency ended the fiscal year with revenues of $65.8 billion and expenses of $67.5 billion.

The postal service has applied for an increase in stamp prices to take effect next year, which would raise the price of a first-class stamp by 3 cents, to 37 cents.

Leader of cloning group urges caution in process

WASHINGTON, D.C .- The president of the company that claims to have cloned the first human embryo defended his firm's actions Tuesday and urged senators not to pass a bill restricting the practice hastily.

"We're not talking about the cloning of humans," Michael West, president of Advanced Cell Technology, told a Senate appropriations subcommittee. "We're talking about the cloning of cells."

"I would argue rather than slow medical research, we take the time to carefully learn these issues," West said.

The Worcester, Mass., company sparked a worldwide debate last month when officials announced they had succeeded in cloning a human embryo for the first time, growing it to six cells before it quit developing.

The company's ultimate goal is to cull, from a cloned embryo, stem cells that could then be grown into custom medical treatments for patients. The company's first embryo was too small to generate stem cells.

EPA orders Hudson River polluters to remove PCBs

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration Tuesday ordered tons of PCBs removed from New York's upper Hudson River, setting in motion one of the largest dredging operations in the nation's history.

General Electric Co., which dumped 1.3 million pounds of PCBs into the river before the substance was banned by the federal government in 1977, bitterly opposes dredging. The cleanup is expected to cost the company some

The final decision from the Environmental Protection Agency mirrors a plan formulated by the Clinton administration and endorsed by the EPA last summer.

"We are going forward with this important cleanup," EPA administrator Christie Todd Whitman said.

Dana Burwell cooked her way to a victory, placing second in the Region VI Culinary Challenge of the National Association of College and University Food Services on Oct.

The conditions of the contest were to come up with a unique recipe using scallops. Burwell constructed her own recipe called "Parsleyed Scallops on Angel Hair Pasta." "I looked up recipes on the Internet and picked what I liked from each recipe," she Burwell had to make her creation in an hour while judges observed. In addition to cooking, she had to demonstrate her ability to use a knife.

"We had to cut potatoes in three different size cuts," she said.

Burwell said she didn't enter the contest to win, but to have a new experience. "I didn't go to see if I could win," she said. "I thought it would be neat to do something like this."

Burwell said her job experience at Derby Dining Center gave her the skills to put together a recipe and create it. "I was trained as a cook when I first started here," she said. "Now I am in customer to implement a one-digit increase, but has not agreed upon a final percentage.

TUITION

Bruce Schubert, Fort Hays vice president of administration, said students, administrators and faculty members are discussing a 4.5 percent tuition increase to account for instruc tional equipment needs.

Fort Hays is different from K-State because it mostly attracts students from its region, not the entire state, Schubert said.

"We're a regional institution," he said. "We believe accessibility is a real goal. Hopefully, we will end up with a modest increase and keep that goal maintained so accessibility is not affected."

He said administrators have considered more severe increases, but they decided harsh tuition hikes would violate their mission.

"A few of us discussed higher possibilities," he said. "But we kept coming back to thinking of access as the most important aspect of a regional institution.

Jason Bennett, Wichita State student body president, said Wichita State is considering a 3 percent tuition increase every year for the next five years to account for inflation.

Wichita State, unlike K-State, is in a metropolitan environment with a variety of surrounding community colleges and private universities for prospective students to choose from - it is much more competitive. Bennett said.

He said that even though Wichita State has seen many increases in its past, high double-digit increases are not an option.

"There are wider implications here," he said. "I would really be surprised if we considered increases that high. A significant portion of our mission is to serve the needs of the metropolitan area. If we increased costs, we would lose students."

Like Fort Hays, he said accessibility is a prime factor in Wichita State's mission.

"Hearing about other universities with higher increases, there seems to be a mission component that is being weighed much higher than the lowcost, high-arcess model," he said. "To be honest, I don't know what that is.

"KU and K-State must be focusing on other components as they develop their tuition proposals."

THE INCREASE IN COMPARISON TO REGIONAL SCHOOLS

Since K-State attracts students state and nationwide, the mix of students' needs requires a different tuition structure than regional universities, said Sue Peterson, director of government relations for the K-State.

"They have mainly in-state students," Peterson said. "As a regional institution, their budgets will be proportional to their smaller student body size. There are big differences between our universities that require different tuition approaches."

Increasing tuition at K-State would advance its research efforts, but she said she did not want students to think administrators were forgetting accessi-

"Access is an important issue, which is why they are crafting a tuition plan that addresses more need-based financial aid," she said. "We have to think, though, about what it takes to provide the quality education you

"In an ideal world, money does not necessarily equal quality. In the real world, we need money for a higher quality education."

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said the 3- to 4.5-percent increases at other schools did not make sense.

With the reality of the state's economic situation and for us to provide a quality education experience. increases are inevitable," Bosco said.

K-State is unique from state and national schools, he said, because it has a three-part mission: teaching, research and service.

"Those are just not words," he said. "They dictate how all are time, energy and money, Regional schools don't have that three-pronged commitment K-State does, and we put our money where our mouth is."

He said he agreed with Peterson that it is important any tuition increase accompanies a new need-based financial aid plan to offset the increases.

"K-State will never ever stop taking care of its undergraduate students and its families," he said.

OTHER UNIVERSITIES THAT ARE INCREASING TUITION

Out-of-state universities that are not able to set their own tuition, also will be experiencing tuition increases

The Iowa Board of Regents approved an 18.5 percent increase for next fall.

Marc Harding, Iowa State University director of administration, said the increase was to help offset shortfalls in the lowa budget.

The increase is the largest the university has experienced in 15-20 years, Harding said.

"The revenue in this state has significantly decreased," he said. "The state legislature came back into a special session and took money back from many areas.

"It's hard to find a state that is not considering significant increases to make up for budget cuts."

The University of Nebraska will experience a 10-percent increase in fall 2002. Joe Rowson, NU director of communications, said the state has had severely declining revenues. Next year's increase will double what its traditional increases have been. Rowson said.

"It's also a matter of quality," he said. "Compared to other institutions. we have to attract the best students."

Nebraska's budget received a $20 million cut. A lot of NU's potential tuition increase depends on the state's evolving revenues, he said.

"If the state continues to have difficulties, obviously there would be further increases in tuition. I hope we are not priced out of our market."

the tuition increase proposals, said John Struve, director of the budget office, said.

Struve's job has been to collect and monitor feedback during the meetings. Overall, he said, students have been receptive to the proposals.

"After the 27 percent increase is proposed, you can watch the students' body language." he said. "At first, they're like, 'Whoa!' But no one is flinching or clamoring that the increases are too much. In fact, no one seems to be insisting on either extreme of the proposals."

He said most discussion has centered around increases in general, not a specific plan. This is healthy, he said, because administrators most likely mix and match the plans instead of sticking to a specific proposal.

"All of the questions have been very thoughtful and with great concern," he said. "They seem to understand that expenditures are terribly underfunded at K-State. They have questions about the increases, but no one is questioning that we need an increase."

Bosco said he has been surprised with the lack of student interest, which is shown in the numbers of students attending the meetings, but not in the quality of questioning.

"They are hearing part of the message," he said. "They know that there has been a responsible, studentfriendly administration at K-State for a couple of decades. When students and faculty members learn where the money is going to be allocated, I believe responses will begin to generate favorably."

Through his interactions with current and prospective students and families, he said they are wary of an

"They're very cautious," Bosco said. "There's a lot of anxiety. When choosing a school, money is the No. 1 deterrent. That's why we have to be able to put together a plan to accommodate their needs."

Usually, when a student's cell phone rings in class, the student quickly reaches into his or her bag to turn the phone off. However, this student decided it would be appropriate if she answered her phone and spoke to the person on the line.

I was shocked, to say the least. As the instructor went ahead with his lecture, the rest of the class, including myself, sat and looked in disbelief at this young woman. She made no attempt to make her conversation private. Others sitting closer to her could hear her each and every word.

Now, this is my question. Is this behavior that our society has decided to find acceptable? Are students aware of how disrespectful this behavior is, not only to instructors, but also to their fellow classmates?

Personally, I find it appalling that a student would even consider doing such a thing in the middle of class. It disturbs the train of thought of students, and even worse, of instructors. Hopefully, students will begin to realize the effects of their inappropriate behavior on other students and instructors.

U.S. ballistic missile program unnecessary

In times of war, the military

Missile defense is a program that would serve as a shield from missile attacks. Theoretically, the missile program is the ballistic and the president should kill. That defense system would first detect any incoming long-range missiles fired upon the United States. The system then would send up its own missile to intercept the attacking missile in order to destroy it.

You'd think this would be a handy thing to have around. Who wouldn't want to live in a country that's protected from a nuclear missile attack? Unfortunately, there's a lot more to this issue than meets To begin with, we

So wouldn't a system that gets at least half the missiles still be better than no system at all? Well, not really.

Remember, we're talking about nuclear missiles here. Even one missile that gets through is going to do some pretty serious damage. I'll admit, I do believe that we have people in this country who are capable of eventually creating the technology that would lead to an effective missile defense system.

But that would require an enormous price tag. According to Newsweek magazine, the latest figure the Defense Department is using for the estimated total cost is more than

K-State to-do list adds to college experience

At times, it seems as if life is nothing more than a big to-do list. For students at K-State, besides the set agenda of classes. I decided to come up with just a few ideas of things to do in between entering college and leaving.

Adam Hayes/Cullington

Here is a list of things students should do before they graduate from K-

1) Walk aimlessly around campus and admire the beauty you often are too busy

2) Take a class from Professor Kelly Welch. She can make a class with more than 500 people feel like there are only a handful of other students present.

3) Eat Call Hall ice cream without mentioning the word "calories." 4) Take advantage of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex after eating the ice cream. 5) Look in the mirror and view your reflection without criticizing anything on your body. 6) Have a dance party in your apartment with only a few people

7) Criticize something, then have the balls or the ovaries to go and try to make a difference in what they criticize. 8) Walk slowly in the rain without an umbrella.

9) Take advantage of the local talent in regard to music, drama and art. 10) Go out for a night in

13) Go on a date with someone you normally would not.

14) Have the courage to talk to someone in class you have had your eye on all semester. 15) Skip class to go bowling at the K-

19) Have your heart broken. 20) Realize you don't need anyone else to improve the quality, thus, the happiness of your life.

21) Drink Sangria at a professor's house. 22) Take time for yourself.

23) Go on a road trip without knowing where you are going.

24) Do a random act of kindness every day without telling anyone else about it. 25) Tell someone he or she is beautiful. 26) Take a kick boxing or yoga class at the

27) Learn about everything you can. 28) Go fishing and use Twizzlers as bait. 29) Try to Riverdance at a bar.

30) Go to the Aggieville Lounge on a Friday afternoon.

31)Go tailgating. 32) Hang out with a different group of people every time you go out.

33) Go to a laundry mat with nearly every item of your wardrobe needing to be cleaned ... including what you are wearing. 34) View the art gallery in the Union.

35) Go to Oktoberfest in Hays and mispronounce the name of the dessert Kouchen in front of an older lady. 36) Have a class on one side of the campus and another one immediately following it on the other side of campus. Try something you are scared to do. 38) Bring food to the hard-working DJs at KSDB-FM 91.9.

43) Spend a weekend watching old classics, such as the politically incorrect "Blazing Saddles. 44) Go a day without quoting anything from a movie or TV show. 45) Feed the Canadian geese at Wildcat the "South Park" movie 46) Dance on the bar at the Purple Pig. 47) Take a class that challenges you.

48) Do a keg stand or use a beer bong. 49) Go to as many concerts as possible. 50) Take a chance at obtaining a urinating in public ticket. 51) Eat imaginary food. 52) Pull an all-nighter.

53) Play in the park in the middle of the 54) Realize how fortunate you are to be here.

55) Don't complain about how boring Manhattan is or how much you don't like K-State. No one forced you to come here. 56) Realize the book you paid $140 is only worth $14 at the end of the semester. 57) Enjoy college, but prepare for your life when it is over. Take some time to create your own to-

Alumni rates cheaper for recent grads

BY KECIA N. SEYB

after graduation doesn't take much - not even much money - officials said, since the KSU Alumni Association provides ways to get involved for $15 a year.

For the first five years following K-State graduation, students can buy membership for $15 a year, said Mitzi Frieling, associate director of alumni programs. Seven out of nine colleges purchase their students' first-year memberships, also, she said. The colleges of Arts and Sciences and Architecture Planning and Design are the only two that do

"The easiest way to stay involved is to become a member of the alumni association," Frieling said.

With the membership, Frieling said, alumni receive the K-Stater magazine four times a year, newsletters, a 15-percent discount at the K-State Student Union on merchandise, a discount at Colbert Hills, a full-wall annual calendar and reduced rates at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

'It really does have a lot of benefits," she said. "The magazine, the discount at the Union and the calendar are probably the three most popular.

As alumni, people can keep up with their classmates in the magazine, attend events, get together and watch K-State games, volunteer or organize a K-State dinner in their city.

"Maybe they're not the high donors," Frieling said, "but they're donating their time, which is so important. They can help with recruiting students. They can give back to the university without opening up their checkbooks."

Ann Barrows, junior in nursing school at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., became a member of the Alumni Association when she left K-State

Alumni Association

For membership cost information or to join, call (800) 600-ALUM (2586), or 532-6260 or go online at www.kstatecollegian.com.

"I became a member so I could network with other K-Staters in Kansas City," Barrows said. "Even though I have lots of friends here, I still wanted to know what's going on with the university.

"If you want to stay in touch with your friends, you're going to," she said. "If you're in the Alumni Association, you're able to stay in touch with the school."

Frieling said the impact of people's college lives is huge, making students want to stay in touch with their university after they graduate.

"College - it's a fun time in your life, but it's also a time when you work really, really hard. Keeping in touch with your university, not through just money, but you almost want to because you're so proud of yourself and your school," she said. "I mean, K-State is, as far as I'm concerned, the best university."

The association provides names of other K-State alumni to those moving to a new city, Frieling said.

"They can instantly have a group of friends where they might not have known anybody before that," she

Phil Stein, senior in political science who will graduate in May. said he plans to join the association. He said he was on the student alumni board for a couple of years, so he saw all of the important programs it provides. Even though his college, the College of Arts and Sciences, does not pay for first-year membership, he said the price is fair.

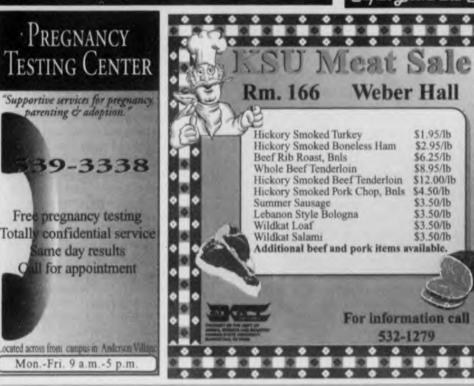

"It's worth it to keep in touch and just find out what's going on." he said. "It's definitely reasonable for all the opportunities and programs they have, Catbackers and newsletters. It's an opportunity for me to eventually give back to the other students."

WSU visits Manhattan in rematch

BY DEREK BOSS
Kansus State Cellegian

Larry Reid hasn't forgotten Wichita State last year.

Two games into the Jim Wooldridge era at K-State, Reid and the Wildcats hit the road to take on the Shockers — a team trying to rebuild its program as well under then-third-year head coach Mark Turgeon.

The result was a 76-66 loss at sold-out Henry Levitt Arena, as WSU overcame a onepoint halftime deficit and used a 10-0 run with just over five minutes to play to hand K-State its first loss of the season.

Hoop action

Wichita State (3-3) at K-State (4-1) When: 7:05 tonight Where: Bramlage Coliseum (13,500) Radio: Wildcat Sports Network: WIBW-AM 580 TV: Metro Sports (Kansas City, Mo.) "I remember that I didn't know the big rivalry." Reid said. "I remember their fans going crazy. I remember that little mascot acting like a fool.

"I didn't really realize until after we lost how much of a big game that was. It's sort of like the KU and KSU rivalry. So, I remember a lot of things, but most of all, I remember that loss."

In his first Division I road game, Reid struggled at the point. He went scoreless in 17 minutes of action, shot 0-for-5 from the field — including three misses from three-point range — and tallied one assist and one turnover.

But Reid and the Cats (4-1) will have a chance to avenge that defeat tonight, as Wichita State (3-3) travels to Manhattan this year for a 7 p.m. tip.

The Shocks are coming off a near-upset of Oklahoma State, falling 61-59 Saturday in Stillwater, Okla. — a game Wooldridge said attests to WSU's marked improvement this season, despite its early record.

season, despite its early record,

"Speaking to Wichita State, what I know of them and what I've seen of them on tape, they've really enhanced their team," Wooldridge said. "They have a much better core of players, a lot of versatility and a lot more athleticism.

"So, five games into the season, to go on the road and play a Top 10 team in Oklahoma State and have a chance to win it at the end speaks volumes of not only their improvement athletically, but their improvement from the beginning of the season to where they are right now."

Meanwhile, the Cats, who are 13-1 all-time versus the Shockers in Manhattan, are coming off their largest margin of victory this season, a 75-57 win over Gardner-Webb.

Tonight will mark the final game of a sixgame homestand for K-State, whose lone loss came in a 67-65 defeat to Mississippi on Nov. 24. WSU also was defeated by the Rebels, 80-68, in the fifth-place game of the Top of the World Classic in Fairbanks, Alaska.

The Cats are led by two seniors, Reid and Travis Reynolds, who average 15.0 and 12.6 points, respectively, but transfer lanerio Spurlock has come on as of late, notching more than 11.5 points in his last three outings.

Wichita State, on the other hand, has nearly five players posting double-digit scores, topped by freshman Randy Burns at a 14.5 per-game clip. Burns, who has started four games for the Shocks, now comes off the bench for Turgeon's squad.

Senior Terrell Benton (13.5 ppg) and freshman Jamar Howard (10.2 ppg) also display double-figure averages, with fellow starters C.C. McFall (9.5 ppg) and freshman Rob Kampman (9.7 ppg) not far behind.

Statistics aside, however, Wooldridge said K-State and WSU are two programs with many similarities.

"We almost mirror one another in terms of what happened a year ago," he said. "We started a little slower than they did, and we finished maybe a little bit stronger than they did, but we were both facing rebuilding years — trying to incorporate some new players with players that had returned from the year before.

"Now, we've both had a chance to go out and bring more players into the program who are playing these major roles. Are they better? We think they're better. Are we better? We think we're a little bit better."

But forward Matt Siebrandt, despite a career-high 24 points last season at Wichita State, is just hoping for a different result tonight against the Shockers, who finished 9-19 a year ago and 4-14 in the Missouri Valley Conference.

"It was an ugly game on our part last year. We really hadn't came together yet," Siebrandt said. "So we remember it, and hopefully we'll have that in our heads when we come to the game on Wednesday."

Senior point guard leads Wildcats

BY DEREK BOSS

Managa State Contigues

One telephone call was all it took for point guard Larry Reid to choose purple. Reid, then a sophomore at Northern Oklahoma Junior College, was hanging out in his Tonkawa, Okla., residence hall room one evening in mid-March. He had a big day ahead of him, as his team — the Mavericks — were set to travel to Hutchinson, Kan., for the 2000 NJCAA Tournament.

Then the phone rang.

It was Charles Baker, K-State assistant coach and former assistant at Louisiana. Tech, who had recruited Reid heavily in the early signing period to link with the Bulldogs.

"I remember telling our head coach at Louisiana Tech, 'Everybody's missing the boat on this guy. We've got to do everything we can to sign him early,'" Baker said.

"I always thought he was one of the top point guards in the country, and I think at one point, he was coming."

But Reid, who was named second team junior college All-American in 2000, chose to hold out for other options.

"I just thought myself as a better basketball player at the time and so did my juco coach," Reid said, "and he guided me in the right direction — that you could wait until after the season and sign, and you'd probably get some better looks, and that's what I did.

"Because Coach Baker, at the time when he was at Tech, I kept telling him, 'No offense to your school, but I think I could play at a higher level of Division I baskethall."

Baker wouldn't give up, though. He said he was sold on Reid the first ime he saw him — at a junior college time he saw him — at a junior college camp in Tulsa, Okla. So when Baker resigned from La. Tech and joined head coach lim Wooldridge's staff at K-State, Reid was high on his recruiting list.

And after clearing it with the Bulldogs' head coach, Baker made the call.

"I told him, 'Let's just be honest — you really want to play at a higher level,'" Baker said, "and he said, 'Yes,' and 'If you have a choice, it would be in the Big 12.' He said 'Yes.' 'And if I would have been a coach in the Big 12 you'd have signed with me, right?' He said, 'Yes.' 'Well, I just got the job at Kansas State.'"

"I told him, 'I'm committing right now.' The one phone call," Reid said. The rest was Wildcat history.

Reid has marched K-State to a 4-1 record this season, leading the team in scoring at 15.0 points per game.

"I'm a scoring threat first," Reid said.
"Every team we've played so far, I can hear the other coach in my ears, saying.
'Don't let him catch it. Keep the ball out of his hands. Get the ball out of his hands.'

"Every game I feel I can take it over."
Reid's talents don't end with scoring, either. The senior also tops the Cats in assists (4.8 pg), steals (1.0 pg) and free throw shooting (88.9 percent), after being named both Honorable Mention All-Big. 12 and a member of the Big 12 All-Newcomer Team last year.

But more than statistics, K-State has an inordinate number of roles this season for Reid, a player Wooldridge said is substantially better than a year ago. And they know he still can improve.

they know he still can improve.

"He's our primary ball handler in transition. He is our initiator of offense. He is our initiator of defense," Wooldridge said, "and again, he's playing so many minutes that sure, there's some things would like to see him to be tree.

we'd like to see him do better.

"But at this point, I think, because he does all these other things, we've got to gradually work into improvement in other areas and not expect him to be perfect in every area of the game at this point. It's not something we're going to see

Reid said he knows he can step up his game, but welcomes new challenges each day he's on the floor.

"I love it all. I love having the ball in my hands," he said.

"It doesn't overwhelm me. It doesn't put pressure on me. I know Coach Wooldridge has a lot of confidence in me, obviously, if he wants me to do all those things, and I have the confidence in myself."

"I think the same way he thinks, so those responsibilities that he puts on me. I just take them."

Reid said being a leader or the go-to guy on a team just comes naturally to him. It's almost like he's a K-State's quarterback on the basketball court.

"This is my team. I wouldn't see it any other way," Reid said, "This is my last year. I'm a senior, and I say it's my team alf the time. I'm going to use the word I' because I see myself as — if we lose a game — I'll put the loss on me. Because it all starts with me.

"I just see it as my team — I'm part of like a second coach, if you could say that, on the court and off the court. We're winning because I'm seeing this as my team, and we're just taking a whole other approach to what we have to do."

funior forward Matt Siebrandt, who entered the K-State program at the same time as Reid last year, said the point guard's leadership isn't vocally induced.

"I know he's said about 10 words since I met him," Siebrandt said.

"He doesn't talk too much, but that's just the guy he is. He's really quiet. He's really reserved, but I think he just lets his game do the talking.

"He's our everything. He handles the ball probably 80 percent of the time. He's our leading scorer. He's so big to our team you can't really explain it because of all the stuff he does for us. If he wasn't on our team, I couldn't see where we'd be. It'd be pretty ugly."

Defenders get passing final grades

Chris Simms for Heisman!

Texas' golden boy quarterback really showed what he was made of against Colorado, proving all the hype surrounding him is for real.

In all seriousness now, this has gone on long enough.

Mack Brown needs to explain himself.
Major Applewhite is

the career passing leader at Texas. He has played only two and a half years. His sophomore year he was the Big 12 Offensive Player of the Year and beat Nebraska in Lincoln.

Since then, he's had to watch Simms blow big game after big game from the sidelines. Sure, Simms put up some huge numbers against KU and Baylor, but those performances are overshadowed by his ineptitude in big games.

Texas isn't taking as much heat in the national media for its dreadful performance against Colorado because Tennessee won at Florida. Steve Spurrier is the laughingstock of college football.

He was so confident his Gators — an 18-point favorite — would beat the Vols, that he spent two weeks before the game accusing Florida State of trying to hurt his pretty boy quarterback Rex Grossman. Hey, Steve, maybe focus on the task at hand?

News flash — by the time you are reading this, KU's vacant head coaching job could be filled, by my favorite target, Oklahoma assistant Mark Mangino. Despite looking like a refrigerator with arms and an OU visor, Mangino is considered an offensive mastermind. I'd tell Mark to think twice, KU doesn't have losh Huepel, Andre Woolfolk, Josh Norman, etc. waiting for you. KU does have a Dunkin Doughnuts on 23rd Street, though, which reportedly has sparked Mangino's interest.

OK, I had to address some other college football issues before revealing K-State's defensive grades. The defense was great for most of the season, so, as promised:

KSU crew signs first prep rowing recruit of new season

Kelly leppesen, a 5-foot-7, 135-pound senior from Winter Park (Fla.) High School has committed to K-State, head crew coach Jenny Hale announced Monday.

Jeppesen is the first woman recruited by the Wildcats in the 2002 signing period,

The prepater is a four-year rower and was a member of the Winter Park varsity 8-boat in 2001 that won the Florida State Youth Championship Regatta and finished fourth at the Stotesbury Cup Regatta, one of the largest junior regattas in the nation.

"We are really happy to have Kelly sign with us," Hale said. "She is a great allaround athlete and was highly recruited by schools such as Connecticut and Wisconsin.

"The fact that she was so highly recruited and she chose us, speaks volumes for the increasing competitiveness of our program. What Kelly will give us is a wealth of racing experience and a feel for the boat that usually takes years to teach at our level. She's a really talented young lady, and we're excited to have her on our team."

Track and field coach earns national coach assignment

Cliff Rovelto, K-State's head track and field coach, has been named an assistant on the United States coaching staff for the 2002 IAAF World Cup meet in September 2002.

"This is an important international event for track and field, and it will be exciting to be around this level of athletes and this level of competition," Rovelto said.

Rovelto will join Rick Sloan as assistants under Ron Bazil for the Sept. 20-21 meet to be held in Madrid, Spain.

Cups, plates, goblets, pitchers. jars, sculptures, candle holders and large, grotesque heads all are part of the pottery sale that ends today in the K-State Student Union.

The Potter's Guild December sale began Monday and ends at 5 p.m. today. A variety of items are available in various price ranges. Jenny Kistner, treasurer of the Potter's Guild, said the profits from the sale are split between the organization and the artists.

The money the organization raises is used to send members to pottery conferences. Additionally, the members often use the money to help pay for supplies. Kistner, senior in ceramics, said.

"The last sale in October, I made around $200, and I make about $100 on average," she said. "It helps pay for clay, art fees and now it helps me in applying for grad school."

Coffee mugs have been selling very well, and Kismer said it helps that people are looking for Christmas gifts.

Guild member Eric Hutton, juntor in geology, said he has sold about $80 worth of work so far, and watching people buy his art can be exciting. "It's very satisfying when they

Though she doesn't usually focus on making functional ware, Kistner said the event is a fun opportunity to sell work.

"I enjoy interacting with the customers that come because sometimes they'll ask me about different processes or pieces," she

New owners create live music night at local bar

BY JJ DUNCAN

Karana State Collegias

Guitars dropping into beer glasses, drinks spilling off the speakers and loud swearing that echoes off the walls is all part of the live music featured at Out of Bounds every Wednesday night

Owners of Out of Bounds, David and Dana Garard - father and daughter - said they thought up the idea of having Wednesday nights devoted to live music. They said they wanted different bands to perform for about four hours each night.

"We started having live music night four months ago when our new ownership started," Dana said. "We brainstormed the idea and thought it was a good way to get people in for cheap drinks and music

Since they began bringing the bands in, Dana said she feels Out of Bounds has gone through some

"We've changed by having different bands and a wide variety of crowds," she said. "Sometimes you have mellow crowds that have one or two drinks and hang out. Other crowds are crazy and jumping up and down and screaming

Though the night tends to run smoothly. David said it does have its challenges

"Finding the right bands that the students want to listen to," he said. "Estimating the crowd to know how much liquor to buy. Sometimes you have no idea. We never know what the bands are going to bring.

Last Wednesday, Special Guests and One Sad Monkey took the stage.

Tyler Lansdown, senior in theater and member of One Sad Monkey, said playing at Out of Bounds is different from other places

"It's one of the best places we've played. The people who work here are very accommodating," he said. "Everyone here loves music.

Lansdown said One Sad Monkey also enjoys playing Out of Bounds because the crowd gets into the groups music.

"There's a very eclectic crowd," he said. "It's fun college music. Sometimes we are a little bit raunchy, Music in bounds and sometimes we are real."

Effigy and Brothers From Different Mothers will perform at 10 tonight at Out of Bounds as part of the venue's Wednesday live music night.

Special Guests also performed last week and drummer Paul White, junior in mass communications and political science, said that Wednesday's show was Special Guests' first time performing at Out of Bounds. White said he hopes to play again on multiple occasions.

"I was excited to do it," he said. The main thing that stuck out was I felt comfortable playing at an establishment that I knew was a host to live music

White said he feels the live music night is an advantage for bands. "If you're a band or a spectator, Out of Bounds is like Dairy Queen because they treat you right," he said. "They are flexible - not many other options where bands can play."

One major part of what makes the live music nights such a success is the crowds. Wayne Van Zee, senior in radio and television, said the reason he checks out the bands is because it's something new to do. People are getting tired of bearing

"In Lawrence, we can see live shows a lot of places. "A lot of people in Manhattan are looking for a live music venue. We disc jockey spin rap songs," he said.

needed something like this." Van Zee said he definitely would return to see more bands at Out of Bounds. 'It's all about everyone having a good time," he said. "The vibe is good and exciting."

Meredith Ladd, senior in elementary education, attended the performance last week. She said the atmosphere at Out of Bounds is better now that it features the live music.

"It's a party atmosphere. The live bands add a twist to the night," she said. "It's a lot more laid back. It's easier to talk to people without the bumping music.

HEISMAN

Bryant also impressed in his first year with the Cats. The loss of projected starter Eric Everly before the season hurt, as did Andrew Shull's suspension, which limited him to five games.

The only thing missing from the defensive line was a big pass rusher. No one stepped up to replace Chris Johnson, and the defensive lineman only recorded 8.5 sacks for the year. The Cats had 18 sacks this season and 39 in

Linebackers: A

Once again, K-State has one of the finest linebacking groups in the country. Led by All-Big 12 pick Ben Leber, the group was outstanding. Leber, alongside Terry Pierce and Josh Buhl, combined for more than 200 tackles and 8.5 sacks. Pierce and Buhl will be the leading returning tacklers next season, look for both to have big years.

Defensive backs: B

This group, like the defensive line, was hurt by departures after last season. The strong safety position had to be filled and two new cornerbacks had to be found.

DeMarcus Faggins and Terence Newman had good years at corner, combining for eight interceptions. Jon McGraw returned and led the secondary in tackles. His departure will hurt the most. This group's grade would be higher, except for the terrible performances at Oklahoma and Texas Tech. Tech QB Kliff Kingsbury is one of the most underrated players in the country and really burned the K-State secondary.

That being said, goodbye to everyone. This is my final column. I hope my columns have been informative and humorous and not shown any bias toward K-State or anyone else, Writing for the Collegian has been a great experience for me, despite the Brandon Walsh/newspaper jokes I get from my friends. I appreciate all of you who have said nice things to me about my columns. Thanks for reading. Later.

said two main groups of anti-Taliban forces are pressing toward Kandahar as a contingent of about 1,300 Marines operates farther south but within striking distance. Other officials said the Marine contingent might grow to about 1,500 in the days ahead.

"The situation in Kandahar is complicated. It's not easy, but one thing is clear: The Taliban and al-Qaeda will be driven from Kandahar," Rumsfeld said.

The Marines' presence, with their vehicle-mounted machine guns, shoulder-fired missiles and attack helicopters, makes it close to impossible for the Taliban to reinforce or resupply Kandahar, he added.

Air Force Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said at the news conference with Rumsfeld that the Marines have begun interdicting lines of communication south of Kandahar, military jargon for blocking or otherwise cutting off roadways leading out of the city.

City waives Quaker obligations

Kensas State Collegian

Quakers Oats Corporation should not be punished for a missed provision in its 1992 leasing agreement, Mayor Bruce Snead said.

The City Commission approved 5-0 a request to waive obligations to the lease agreement in the amount of $424,000. The money will be paid back at a rate of 20 percent over five years.

"They are a good corporate citizen, they pay their taxes on time and they are strengthening. The corporation shouldn't be punished because the trustee failed to close the agreement appropriately," Snead said.

In 1999, the Manhattan Quaker Oats plant was put on hold while the St. Joseph and Shiremanstown plants were shut down. Since then, the plant has continued to grow, offering higher production and employees.

Brett Allison, plant manager, said the commission's motion will give them the space it needs to expand in the future. He said 30,000 to 40,000 sq.ft. of long-term space is needed. Costs to purchase a building or add on to its location in the Industrial Park are being discussed. The facility encompasses about 20,000 square

"Without space, the plant is in jeopardy of losing volume and the downward spiral effect that follows," Allison said.

Harmful asbestos present across campus

BY MICHAEL WATSON

Kansas State Collegian

Asbestos can be found in almost every building on campus, but it is nothing to worry about, officials said.

Steve Galitzer, director of public safety, said he doubts the university will ever identify all of the asbestos on campus. Asbestos is a mineral fiber that commonly was used in building construction materials. There is asbestos in the ceilings, water lines, floor tiles and on different plumbing. In older buildings, asbestos was used as a fire stop.

"As long as these materials aren't damaged, they really can't hurt anybody," Galitzer said. "We wouldn't make anyone do asbestos work that didn't have the proper training. Facilities people should know to stop what they're doing and let someone know.

"It's when people rub up against the material or scrape it off the ceiling when it can be hazardous," he said. "The asbestos on pipes is a hard material. You would have to hit it with a hammer to damage it. When we observe any damage, we fix it."

Asbestos can be hazardous to someone's health if inhaled. It can increase the risk of lung cancer; mesothelioma, a rare cancer of the chest and abdominal lining; and asbestosis, potentially fatal lung scarring. Symptoms of these diseases usually do not show up until 15 to 20 years after exposure begins.

Skyler Harper, assistant director for the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said there is asbestos in almost every residence Asbestos was removed from Van Zile Hall 12 years ago, a process that cost $500,000. Harper said the cost has gone up since then. The only other residence that is asbestos-free is the Smith Scholarship House. All the others have asbestos in some form, he said.

Removal is not always the best thing, Harper said. The Environmental Protection Agency agrees in some cases it is best to manage the asbestos.

"Once you disturb it, and it gets airborne, that's when it can be dangerous," he said.

Peter Batsakis, former director of occupational safety, said he is concerned about students who might be putting their lives in danger in the residence halls.

"Students will carve their name in the ceiling or their bunk beds or hang a plant. Students do this not knowing they are putting themselves in danger," he said. "The person in the top bunk is just feet away from that."

Not all ceilings have asbestos. It is the textured ceilings that might have asbestos. Some room ceilings have been replaced with a Bill Girard, Division of Facilities maintenance supervisor, said students are informed that nothing is supposed to be hung from the ceiling and that a certain clearance is required when students build loft beds. He said textured ceilings do not endanger students unless they are disturbed.

Harper said the university has done a good job identifying asbestos.

"We just hired a new consultant, and they have a really good handle on it. So we have a pretty good idea where the asbestos is," he

There aren't many projects during the school year that deal with asbestos, Harper said.

"During the school year we don't do too much remodeling," he said. "Every once in a while, we will do pipe work where we have to work with asbestos. If we do find a spot, and I don't think we've had this problem in a long time, we close it off immediately. That's the great thing about doing the work ourselves."

When asbestos was found in front of Seaton Hall on Oct. 30 while digging holes for the Sept. 11 memorial, some of the asbestos was left undisturbed.

"Architects were asked to add a note that it was left there," Galitzer said. "We removed all the friable asbestos we could - asbestos that can be crushed to a powder with your fingers, but we didn't want to go digging there.

"Sometimes you put more people at risk by doing something than leaving it alone," he said.

The university contracts with one or two landfills to bury asbestos that has been

"They keep track of where in the landfill they bury it," Galitzer said. "We don't want to uncover buried asbestos." He said more landfills will accept the hard, non-friable asbestos than friable asbestos that can be crushed into a powder with your fingers. Both substances must be protected and transported for immediate burial, but friable material must be double bagged in a

Students will have one of their last opportunities to voice their concerns about a potential tuition increase

Faculty Senate will sponsor an alluniversity forum at 3:30 p.m. in the Hale Library Hemisphere Room on the lifth floor.

So far, student input has been minimal, but hopefully students will attend the forum, said Sue Peterson, assistant to the president.

"I think students should come, because this is about them and their future." she said.

"It's an important point in the university and journey of Kansas State University.

"It's real critical for students to have their voices heard."

University administrators have made several presentations to college councils and other groups on campus. Today's university forum and a presentation to Student Senate at 6 tonight will complete the sessions.

K-State's tuition proposals range from increasing it by just 3 or 4 percent each year for the next five years to tripling it in the next five

"It's pretty scary to think what we could be paying," Student Body President Kyle Barker said. "The primary mission of K-State has been to serve the students of Kansas. Those students aren't traditionally economically endowed.

In January, K-State will submit its proposal to the Kansas Board of Regents. A number will be finalized in the spring.

"The key right now is getting students involved," Barker said. - Sarah Bahari

NATION IN BRIEF

Officials capture fugitive suspected of anthrax hoax

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A fugitive suspected of mailing hundreds of fake anthrax letters to abortion clinics was captured by federal authorities Wednesday.

FBI officials said Clayton Lee Wagner was caught in the Cincinnati area. Apprehended by the U.S. Marshals Service, he was among the FBI's 10 most-wanted fugitives.

Attorney General John Ashcroft has called Wagner the primary suspect behind anthrax hoaxes committed against 280 abortion clinics last month.

Wagner, 45, allegedly claimed responsibility for the letters when he showed up with a gun at the Georgia home of an anti-abortion activist recently, authorities said.

Diane Rust, a branch manager at a Kinko's Inc. copy store in Cincinnati, confirmed that Wagner was arrested at the store.

Ashcroft noted Wagner's apprehension at installation ceremonies for Ben Reyna as new head of the U.S. Marshals Service.

A series of most-wanted-fugitive pictures was displayed at the ceremony, and Ashcroft exclaimed. "I'm pleased to say that, no sooner does Ben take over the U.S. Marshals Service ... we can write across the face of that poster, 'Apprehended!"

Wagner had been on the lam since February, when he escaped from a jail in Clinton, Ill., where he was awaiting sentencing on federal firearms and auto theft convictions.

Bomb misses target, kills 3 U.S.soldiers, injures 19

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Three American soldiers were killed and 19 wounded in Afghanistan on Wednesday when a bomb launched from an Air Force B-52 bomber missed its target. The friendly-fire accident produced the worst U.S.

The Pentagon initially reported that two were killed.

Spokeswoman Victoria Clarke later said one of the injured soldiers had died en route to a hospital. She had no details on the seriousness of the other injuries.

These were U.S. special forces that died," she said, adding that five Afghan troops also were killed.

The accident raised to four the number of Americans killed in combat in Afghanistan. Four others died in accidents.

Clarke said the incident occurred north of Kandahar, the last Taliban stronghold. That is where opposition forces - assisted by small numbers of U.S. special operations troops - are trying to overthrow the besieged former rulers of the

The munition dropped by the B-52 was a 2,000-pound satelliteguided bomb called IDAM, or loint Direct Attack Munition - and was meant to hit Taliban troops. Pentagon spokesman Lt. Col. Dave Lapan said.

White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said President Bush regrets the loss of life and wishes the injured a full and speedy recovery.

"Our thoughts and prayers are going out to them and to their families." Clarke told a Pentagon briefing.

"And it just underscores what we don't say often enough around here - that every single day there are men and women willing to put their necks on the line and put themselves in grave danger, and we appreciate what they do.'

Stufflebeem said the U.S. soldiers killed and wounded had called in the B-52 strike as Afghan opposition forces were fighting Taliban troops. He said the bomb landed about 100 yards from the U.S. troops, but he was not certain the exact location of the intended target. To be safe, a person should be at least 1,300 yards away from the explosion of a bomb that size.

"I came here for a change, although it is not that much different," Falk said.

Some of the major differences he has noticed include the ways the governments of the two countries are set up. In the United States, he said, health care is independent from the government, whereas in Canada the government handles heath care, which is provided for all of its citizens.

"I don't know that it is better. If you are a poorer person and can't afford health care, then it's better in Canada, but if you work for a big corporation, and they provide your health care, it could be better here," he said.

Another difference is in the proactive way the United States uses its military, which is not as common in Canada. Sports also are different between the neighboring nations. Hockey, Falk said, is followed much more in Canada than in the United States, where he has to make an effort to look for hockey games on the television. He also plays on the K-State roller hockey team.

"The climate is much warmer here," he said as an explanation for the disinterest in hockey in the United States. "That is actually one reason why I came Falk had traveled to the Midwest before and enjoyed the area before becoming a part of the exchange program. He said the people in America are friendly, and he intends to continue studying at K-State next semester.

"I am from an agricultural community, and it is kind of the same here. Generally, rural people are friendly," Falk sald.

However, Falk said he is looking forward to the university's winter break so he can reconnect with his friends and family in Manitoba.

Officials presenting tuition plans to Senate

BY ALYSON RALETZ

Calling a special Student Senate meeting during dead week, Matt Wolters, senate chair, said administrators will present their last tuition increase proposal to the governing body, and senators will be able to give some final student feedback tonight in the Big 12 Room.

"It's important to have the meeting so students and senators can give their final input before the administrators sit down and make their final decisions," Wolters said.

He said most of the senators already have seen the presentations at their College Council meetings, but the 6 p.m. meeting will give them a chance to communicate any final concerns.

"The senators have been out and involved with their colleges, so many of them are already informed," Wolters said.

"I am hoping tonight will be a chance for senators to have a chance to ask some tougher questions."

Since the University of Kansas recently released its tuition increase proposals, he said senators will have questions comparing K-State to other Kansas schools.

"Now that we have some physical numbers to be looking at, we are beginning to realize this is really happening over at KU and we are wondering about the comparisons," Wolters said.
"What's going on at Fort Hays and Wichita? I've got some questions as to how we are going to fit in with the other schools in all this."

Earlier in the semester, he said Senate would draft legislation releasing an official recommendation to the administrators voicing a stance on the tuition issue, but no legislation will be drafted.

"To be honest, it's hard to come up with what our opinion is," Wolters said, "If we drafted legislation, it wouldn't be specific. It would support a moderate increase, but ask administrators to keep students in mind. The legislation would carry no weight since these feelings are already well-known anyway."

Students who wish to voice their tuition concerns before tonight's meeting can call their college's senators or can call other student government leaders at the Office of Student Activities and Services at 532-6541.

Tracz said he always knew his future laid in the band, but liked shop growing up.

"I was really into carpentry." Tracz. said. "I made a hope chest. I called it a hopeless chest for my sisters. I made this wall, corner cabinet for my dad, so I was really into that. But I really liked band."

It was witnessing an unusual event in shop class that convinced Tracz to go into music education.

"I was standing in line to use the saw and a kid purposefully cut his thumb off. He put it behind a piece of board, a 2x2 and took it right across the saw and cut his thumb off." Tracz said. Ohio State University as a music education major, and he never questioned that decision.

"I never wanted to change my major." Tracz said. "There were times when I'd come up to a class where I'd wonder. 'How am I ever going to pass this or get by this?' But I did."

After getting his undergraduate degree, he earned his masters degree at the University of Wisconsin. He taught public school music for two years in Wisconsin, then moved back home to Cleveland to teach high school for another four years near where he grew up.

He returned to Ohio State for his doctorate and began his college teaching career at Syracuse University, where he was an assistant for four years. After Syracuse, he went on to Moorehead, Ky., where he was the hand director for two years.

As the football program at K-State began to pick up, university officials began to notice the band program. They decided to bring in a director who had the reputation of being a program rebuilder, which was exactly what they needed.

Tracz is in his ninth year at K-State, a school he said is his favorite.

"We enjoy this lifestyle here — the community is excellent," Tracz said.
"The students here, and I honestly believe this, are probably the hardest working, most respectful students I've had anywhere."

Teaching future teachers isn't Tracz's only job. As director of bands at a university, his job is much more than teaching, conducting classes or leading ensembles.

"I administrate the people, administrate the equipment, I balance the books, raise funds." Tracz said.

Recruiting also is a large part of the job. Tracz said he spends a lot of time recruiting students from Kansas high schools.

"Recruiting never ends. This is Kansas, so you're at a disadvantage that there aren't a lot of people in the state." Tracz said.

Tracz said finding his ideal dream job meant being in the right place at the right time. His reputation as a rebuilder of programs helped him get the K-State position — a job, he said, he enjoys.

"If I had to do it all over again. I'd take the same path," Tracz said.

placed in a single bag. Galitzer said the identification and removal was handled properly in the extraction outside Seaton Hall.

In May 2000, workers were removing carpentry-type benches in Trotter Hall, Identification and removal was not handled as well in this situation and asbestos fibers in the floor were damaged, exposing the air.

The EPA reported that "officials at Kansas State University failed to follow the applicable asbestos regulations prior to and during the renovations of room 104 in Trotter Hall when they failed to inspect for asbestos, failed to notify appropriate regulatory agencies and failed to conduct initial air sampling."

K-State was fined $37,400, but the fine was later reduced to $8,800 after negotiations between the EPA and the Batsakis said new rules resulted from the Trotter Hall incident. The new rules, he said, brought precautions workers were not used to.

ns workers were not used to.
"New rules may require precautions in certain situations. Workers weren't used to that," Batsakis said.

"Let's say you put in a work order as a professor. You want to have some painting done. Facilities will have to do their thing, but there may be asbestos in the walls. The new law says they have to be trained to handle the asbestos."

Mike Warren, asbestos shop supervisor, said this policy of mandatory handling did not go over well with facilities workers.

"We are starting a new volunteer project to prevent work from changing hands," Warren said. "If a worker is working on a project and they find asbestos, they can quit the project they are working on and work with the asbestos. The rule is, nobody will work with asbestos unless they are a volunteer and are properly trained."

By taking a five-day class, workers learn to deal with all forms of ashestos. By taking a 16-hour course, workers can work with floor tile and non-triable asbestos. The non-friable material is a solid material and is not as hazardous.

Ed Rice, director of facilities, said this program resulted from a petition filed in August by facilities workers that alleged that facilities administrators consistently had overlooked and neglected safety measures regarding asbestos removal.

The petition also said the policy requiring all facilities workers to become certified in handling asbestos was unfair. Workers said dealing with hazardous chemicals should be optional and should be compensated through increased wages.

Batsakis said he left K-State because of the administration's lack of concern about health and safety and environmental concerns.

"They didn't ask the workers if they wanted to work with asbestos. They tried to dictate," he said.

Rice said problems from mandatory labor have been remedied by the new volunteer program. He said he has not heard any complaints.

Carpentry Senior Mike Rooding said the volunteer program is moving K-State in the right direction. New employees still will be required to be trained to handle asbestos, but the work will be voluntary.

"When people were hired before, they were hired specifically as a carpenter or plumber. Now people are hired up front saying you will have to work with asbestos," Rooding said. "It's up to them if they want the job." Rooding said there might be a wage increase for workers who work with ashestos. The proposal is 60 cents more an hour, applicable only while they are working on a project that involves asbestos.

It is a step in the right direction, he said, but 60 cents does not mean much when dealing with worker's health and responsibility of the labor.

Galitzer said studies show people who work with asbestos have a five times higher chance of harmful effects than people who do not work with asbestos. Smokers have a 10 times higher chance of harmful effects than nonsmokers. Smokers who work with asbestos have a 50 times higher chance of harmful effects than nonsmokers.

If enough asbestos fibers are in the air, it could be hazardous, Galitzer said, It's not unusual to find low fiber counts outside. There is a small quantity of asbestos in the air just from asbestos brake pads on vehicles. It was not until recently that manufacturers started using metallic brakes.

Regulations are written for people who work with ashestos. K-State has a program to monitor the air for ashestos fibers to ensure safety. The permissible exposure limit for eight hours of a 40-hour work week is 0.1 fibers per cubic centimeter.

"Once a worker is working at 0.1 fibers per cubic centimeter, they have to do something to reduce that count. It may result in a health effect," Galitzer said, "When we do air samples for our workers and work is done properly, those counts should."

never get close to 0.1 fibers per cubic centimeter.

"Once they get that close, they have to wear a respirator," he said. "Our policy is to work with a respirator anyway, because there is a danger of reaching that level."

Facilities also measures asbestos fibers to make sure areas are safe to work in. While there are a lot of buildings with asbestos, Galitzer said he does not think it's a problem.

"It's a matter of dealing with it and keeping it at low-risk," he said.

University should educate students, promote asbestos awareness

any students are unaware there is asbestos on campus. It is crucial for the university to take an active role and educate students and faculty about it.

Asbestos can be found on almost any building on campus, and it was commonly used as building material for years before it was found to be harmful.

As long as the asbestos is not disturbed, it cannot cause harm. But if students and faculty are unaware of its presence, harm can result.

The residence halls have explicit rules for not hanging anything from room ceilings. If students knew of the asbestos, then maybe those who might break the rules would reconsider.

If people are unaware of the presence of asbestos and then they are suddenly told about it, chances are they will freak out. If we have something on campus we don't want to spend money on to remove, education in an open, honest manner is only fair. It is simply good public relations.

If students or facility workers are concerned about asbestos, there is information about handling and procedures on the K-State Division of Facilities home

The university has taken time to lay out a plan for facility workers and how they should deal with this harmful substance. Let's make some time to educate students about asbestos so they will be more aware of its presence. With a substance like this, it is important to keep the lines of communication open.

Changes at K-State instigated by college student government

I feel as if the opinion column written by Matt Killingsworth on Tuesday calls attention to many students' concerns. Killingsworth complained that student fees continue to increase, and that students who participate in student government can't make a difference on campus and are just participating in student government to pad their résumés.

Although he brings up some good points, it is hard to accomplish changing the face of K-State in one year. That is why the same issues continue to "rear their ugly heads." It takes some time to fix problems that six years of record enrollment cause, such as parking availability and privilege fee increases (which decreased 3 percent this semester).

Killingsworth is wrong when he assumes these students cannot make a difference. I have been involved with student government for a short amount of time, but from what I have experienced, I can guarantee the students of K-State that their views are being represented by 60 student senators and over 150 students who serve on campuswide

These students are involved in student government because it is an activity, just like playing a collegiate sport or in the band. For Killingsworth to write that they are just participating for personal gain is not fair to these students. They put forth large amounts of time, effort and dedication to represent K-State students.

I do agree with Killingsworth that the election process we have at K-State is a special right, and I urge students to take part in it. Last year, we had a record turnout for online voting with 20 percent of students participating. I think this trend will continue. And if you don't vote, that shouldn't stop you from voicing your opinion on issues that affect students.

We are empowered at this university as students to be the change we want to see, and I think it is important for students to know that one student can make a difference.

college or university - to earn an education. It was a given that high school graduation meant moving on to further our educations.

K-State's campus is releasing a collective sigh of relief as the fall semester nears an end. One can almost hear the heaving chests of K-Staters as each final project and exam reaches completion. Amid the sighs, however, one still can feel the tension growing as students wonder if they will even live to see the sunrise Dec. 15. At this time, we wonder if that last paper will ever get completed, or if we will just quit school the week before Everyone has his or her fears of tomorrow or next week. But what about the rest of the future?

I am not talking about the week after finals. I am talking about a more distant future, the time of our children or the children of our peers.

In this final column of the semester, I want to share two fears about the lives of the next generation, I know I might be adding to your stress, but why not feed your brain some tasty new material to snack on between study

The first concern I have is about education and how much time tomorrow's children might spend in school

We are here because we see value in getting (or providing) a college education. Most students hope to at least stroll off this campus with a bachelor's degree someday.

Many of us always assumed we would be here - or at some other

This assumption is based on the near necessity of earning an undergraduate degree for most fields in today's work force. Life is guaranteed to be more difficult for us without this four- (or five, but hopefully not six) year experience.

We need to remember that this has not always been the case. Most of our parents had a much different experience. For them, a bachelor's degree was not necessarily expected or treated

At that time, earning a graduate degree truly was rare. But now, many students are considering earning a master's degree, so they can scramble further up the job applicant pile.

I think it is fantastic so many people are spending more time learning about their fields of interest. What is scary about it, however, is the fact that students have been forced to do so.

Education at the graduate level has become increasingly more common as Americans vie for full-time positions with companies. A master's degree has become just another activity to pad

Fourum follies, mullets mark top of semester memories list

Here it is, the final week of classes, and you probably find yourself wondering where the last 16 went.

Adam Hayes/Collegian

Sixteen weeks is an ample period of time in which to construct memories, but what exactly do you remember?

Many of us would cite the terrorist attacks, for obvious reasons. Others might mention the breaking news in pop culture, whether it be Mariah Carey's breakdown, Harry Potter's world domination or Tom and Nicole's traumatic breakup. I'm sure 10 years of matrimony does qualify as a Golden Anniversary in Hollywood, but to the outside world, registers more as a

If asked what we remember of our last semester at K-State, many of us might be caught scratching our heads.

There is a world of recollections hovering about you, and I intend to, well, recollect them.

I salute you, incoming freshmen, who roomed in the more "creative" rooms in the basement and former study rooms in some residence halls. Kudos to all who sacrificed those beloved chambers of educational development for the common good of your fellow residents.

Susan Powell

With the inflow of freshmen and transfer students also arrived the outbreak of mullet mania. Never in my academic career have I witnessed such heated debates over fashion consciousness, or lack thereof. For all of you who still are enamored with the topic, anticipate a new anthology at local bookstores titled, "Mullets: the Best of the Fourum."

Ah, the Fourum. Such a multifunctional facet of the Collegian. Not only is the Fourum your mullet sounding board, but your suggestion box to us diligent columnists (My lambasting has been kept to a minimum, and I thank you all wholeheartedly).

Ever notice the Classifieds section never has any personal ads? The Fourum strikes again. It seems anonymity is the romancing method of choice this

If, alas, the Fourum dating service provided no results, remember those times spent bonding with friends: the games of shoe golf in front of the Strong Complex, the Ultimate Frisbee competitions, the lighthearted fun of a panty raid. This semester procured memories we won't soon forget, no matter how hard some of us might try.

As we depart for winter break, heading to our respective homes, let us not forget the unique environment that is Manhattan. There is something magical about Aggieville, Tuttle Creek and the Squirrel Regime, which secretly controls all administrative power on campus. I recently was berated by an executive officer, who stuffed an acorn in his mouth then proceeded to beat his chest. I kid you not.

Take note of whatever images, recollections and memories these examples materialize in your conscious. All too often, we focus our attention on the negative aspects of our lives, the tragedies and humiliations, that the amusing, everyday occurrences fade out of attention. Remember, the daily joys, oddities and personal achievements historians are likely to overlook.

Head coach Bill Snyder said at the beginning of the season, it would be important for this year's team to build a foundation early in

While that foundation was established with two wins to begin the season, K-State's streak of bowl appearances and winning seasons would be in jeopardy for much of the year.

The Cats' 10-6 win over Southern California on Sept. 8 gave Snyder his 100th win at K-State. Two weeks later against New Mexico State, the Wildcats pinned 64 points shutout in two years.

The win marked the 12th consecutive time under Snyder that the Cats started a season 2-0, but K-State's third win wouldn't come as easily.

Coming into conference play, K-State had all the confidence of a championship football team. At 2-0, the Wildcats were looking to make another run at their first Big 12 Championship after being denied twice in the last three years.

SEPT. 29: AT OKLAHOMA

The Sooners' quick-strike offense would be too much for K-State, and 17 Wildcat penalties kept the team from completing its comeback bid, as Oklahoma squeezed out a 38-37 win.

"We gave up big plays and penalties," Snyder said. "We gave up some major, lengthy passes, and we got some pass interference calls, and that was the spin of it."

The loss dropped K-State to 0-1 in the conference and marked the first time since 1997 the Wildcats began Big 12 play with a

OCT. 6: VS. COLORADO

Fresh off their third straight loss to the Sooners, a frustrated group of Wildcats returned home to take on Colorado, a team K-State had beaten four straight times.

But for the second straight week, the Cats ran into a team hitting on all cylinders. K-State was held to just 196 yards of total

"As an offensive unit, we struggled a lot today. I wouldn't say we underestimated Colorado, but we didn't have the fire in our eves that we did against OU," sophomore quarterback Ell Roberson said.

For the first time since 1992, K-State was 0-2 in the Big 12.

OCT. 13: AT TEXAS TECH

The Cats' first conference win wouldn't come in Lubbock, Texas, either.

K-State's defense surrendered 409 passing yards to Red Raider quarterback Kliff allowing five sacks. The Wildcats dropped the game 38-19 to fall to 0-3 in the conference. "I didn't believe at this particular point in time that we were a real good football team," Snyder said. "There were a lot of reasons why that might be true. We just aren't good enough right now.

"We have a lot of things that have to take place in order for us to get back on track."

OCT. 20: VS. TEXAS A&M

K-State came into its game with the Aggies looking to avenge last season's loss in College Station, Texas.

Instead, the Wildcats gave up 17 unanswered points off two Roberson turnovers and Aaron Lockett's muffed punt return in the second half, and came up a yard short of a drive-saving first down with under a minute to go to fall, 31-24, in K-State's fourth attempt for its first conference win.

"We headed down to one play in the ballgame - either they were going to make a play, or we were going to make a play, and I felt like we were going to make that play and win that ballgame," A&M Coach R.C. Slocumb said. "There's not much margin for error there - you gotta stop them, and we did a great job."

"I think everybody's proud of the way we played collectively, and anytime you can play well as a team, you can only go up," senior linebacker Ben Leber said. "This may not be the K-State of old, but certainly I think we're going to get back to it."

NOV. 3: AT IOWA STATE

K-State used clock management and power football as the Wildcats earned their second conference win of the season against the Cyclones, 42-3.

K-State gained 431 yards on the ground, the game averaging, and stopped nearly every Iowa State threat in the game.

"I think it's a matter of our football team getting a little bit better," Snyder said. "I just think we have gradually started to get ourselves better. We're starting to make some improvement, and that's the issue."

NOV. 10: AT NEBRASKA

The Wildcats could have come within one win of bowl eligibility with a win over the Huskers, but Eric Crouch had different plans in Lincoln, Neb.

Nebraska extended its dominance over K-State in Lincoln to 16 games with a secondhalf comeback spurred by a 7:19 drive to open the third quarter.

"We got beat by a tremendous football team," Snyder said. "Against a team like Nebraska, you can't do the things that we did and expect to have a chance.

The loss dropped K-State to 4-5, two wins away from bowl eligibility with two games left on the schedule.

The Cats would come out with a chip on their shoulders against Louisiana Tech, though, and dispatched the Bulldogs 40-7 to keep their postseason hopes alive. The win set up a must-win situation Nov. 24 against Missouri.

BY DEREK BOSS

im Wooldridge still is looking for his first in-state victory.

The K-State head coach lost once to Wichita State and three times to Kansas last season in his firstyear at the Wildcat helm. He was hoping to snap that streak Wednesday night against the Shockers.

It didn't happen.

K-State (4-2) rallied from an eight point halftime deficit to lead by as many as four, but Wichita State (4-3) used a late 12-0 run and hit its free throws down the stretch to nab a 65-56 win at Bramlage Coliseum.

"It's a bad feeling in my gut, man." senior Travis Reynolds said. "We're better than that team. We're better than that team. And we've just got to play better. They've beat me two years in a row, and it's just hard to take right now.

"But until everybody on the team starts believing we're better than those guys, it's going to be real difficult for

It was difficult for both teams early, as the game's first 13 possessions netted just four total points. In fact, it took more than nine minutes for either score to eclipse the 10-point mark.

K-State eventually would build a 20-14 lead with 7:54 to play in the half, though, before things began to fall went to the zone defense. The Cats, amid a seven and a half minute scoring drought, watched WSU end the period on a 16-2 run and snatch a 30-22 advantage at the intermission. K-State committed five of its first-half nine turnovers during that famine.

"You hate to not give credit where credit's due, but I really think a lot of our problems were self-inflicted." Wooldridge said.

But, as has been the precedent this season for the purple, the Cats would offensively.

rally. K-State outscored the Shocks 19-7 in the first seven minutes of the second half to gain its biggest lead of the period, 41-37.

Two Larry Reid free throws kept that advantage at four, 47-43, with 8:01 to play, but more offensive struggles would follow and WSU reeled off 12 unanswered points over a nearfour minute span.

"We called several timeouts and really felt like the thing was sliding a little bit around that five-minute mark." Wooldridge said, "and as it turned out, it was.

K-State would cut the deficit to four, 55-51, however, when Pervis Pasco stepped to the line for the oneand-one. The center missed the charity, but Reynolds was there for the offensive rebound - only to be negated as the referee called an offensive foul on the Cat forward, and the Shocks' Rob Kampman hit both free throws at the other end with under a minute left.

"I'm not sure. I thought I got in quicker than him," Reynolds said, "but they made the call, and it probably was going to be a good call."

WSU would shoot 8-of-10 from the stripe the rest of the way, sealing

"Coming into the game," Reynolds said, "Coach told us, Those guys are really good on the perimeter, but the game's going to be won in the paint."

It was, as 6-foot-8 forward Troy Mack led the Shockers with 20 points and 10 rebounds inside, though Kampman's four three-pointers came at key junctures for Wichita State.

K-State, on the other hand, never could find an offensive rhythm. Wooldridge said.

"I thought offensively - almost for a 40 minute game - you could say that we had real problems just moving bodies, getting the ball moved and getting where we needed to be," he said. "It was really difficult tonight

K-State to Phoenix tonight

BY MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

Two basketball teams vying for a spot in the Top 25 will face off at 7 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum. The K-State women's team received its first vote of the year after winning the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic, but the Cats' opponent received one vote in the last poll. As a result, K-State has its work cut out for it, head coach Deb Patterson said.

"I think they're one of the best passing and cutting teams we'll see all year long. They're very aggressive on the offensive end," she said. "They run a really impressive motion offense. This team has won a lot of impressive ballgames up to this point in time. We'll have a great challenge on our hands."

Entering the game, Wisconsin-Green Bay (4-1) is on a roll with a two-game winning streak, so even though the Cats (6-1) are averaging 89.3 points a game and have four starters scoring in doubledigits. K-State's players are not overconfident, freshman forward Kendra Wecker

"They're going to be scrappy. They're going to come in and play hard and come after us," she said. "We're not going to scare them off just because we're a Big 12

The Phoenix are led in scoring by senior forward Mandy Stowe, who averages 17.6 points per game. Junior guards Sara Boyer and Kristy Loiselle are putting up 13.4 and 10.2 points per game, respectively. Loiselle also is the team's top rebounder, grabbing 7.6 per contest.

Mandy Stowe is playing great minutes for them and is a very versatile post player," Patterson said.

"Their guards are very good off the dribble and making just great basketball decisions. It's going to be a great opponent and one that will again prepare us for the Big 12."

The Phoenix style of offense actually is quite different than that of Big 12 teams, but it's their intensity that should give the Cats a taste of what the Big 12 is like.

"We will see this kind of aggressiveness," Patterson said. "They'll definitely test our intelligence because they're smart. The last time K-State played a team that tested its guards was against Arizona State in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands. In that game, the Cats' freshmen guards struggled against intense pressure, and the team lost 76-58. "I think, as coaches, we've helped a little bit with that as well." she said. "Because when we saw we struggled with that, we put them in the position of some plays to take some pressure off of our players, and I think it's really helped." K-State also should be helped by the home crowd, which already has made an inserting a few new offensive looks and impression on the team. "We were so excited about the crowd at the Commerce tournament," Patterson

"We thought they really helped elevate the enthusiasm in the gym, and I think that's made this group particularly anxious and ready for their next home their street clothes on. Their careers had ended, and for me, my first newspaper beat was soon to be just a memory.

So, instead of thanking everyone and their dog for God knows what since the columns this week have resembled some kind of Oscars acceptance speech tryout - I thought it might be necessary to recognize the volleyball team for its accomplishments this year. Because when you aren't a sport that plays on ABC every Saturday, or a sport that competes both semesters, people don't notice you.

view

So here are two significant factors that make the volleyball team just as special, if not more, than K-State's other precious

Sean Purcell DEDICATION TO TEAMMATES AND

You always hear of coaches yelling at players, players yelling at teammates and fans booing the team. It happens during football games, and when the basketball team is faltering, students exit stage left. But you never will see a volleyball fan leave. In fact, they stay until the end to give the team a standing ovation win, lose or draw.

This is why the volleyball team loves their fans, competing hard each and every time on the court so that they can continue to earn the respect of those fans. People come to cheer on the volleyball team not because it is popular, but because the team deserves it - because it is that damn good.

"The fans were unbelievable - 1 knew they would be - but they came out with their purple on and battled the Nebraska fans during the tournament, and that just makes me so proud to be part of K-State," Wegner said. "It was so hard to walk away from that, but I will always have that memory when I look back at this university."

CHARISMATIC PERSONALITIES It isn't easy to smile and be happy all the time, especially when it comes to dealing with the media. Believe me, I have thought several times of what it would be like to switch spots with Aaron Lockett or Larry Reid, or even Liz Wegner for that matter.

I don't know if I could handle it. But the volleyball women just kept smiling, even when times were tough, even when it was hard to fight back tears, because they knew not many papers would run the story of how they upset No. 13 Texas A&M on Senior Night, or how Wegner broke the all-time career kills record at a storied Division-I program, but all were there when they lost to Nebraska in the NCAA tournament.

K-State volleyball just continues to work hard. As head coach Suzie Fritz always said, "That is part of our identity."

It definitely is. Even when the team didn't play its best and lost a tight match, or when it upset a top program in dramatic fashion, it was the same blue-collar team that strived for perfection. Maybe that is why it's K-State's highest-ranked sport (18).

"Every time we stepped on the court, we played hard and played K-State volleyball," Mimick said. "I may be a little biased, but K-State is the best university anyone can go to because the people are so great, and the professors are great, and we have President Wefald who backs us. So I have no regrets."

Neither do I.

I don't regret taking that beat from Dan Smith and running with it. I feel privileged to have been a part of K-State's most exciting sport of the fall semester. I think I did a pretty good job of covering it. And the only people who can tell me if I did or didn't are those 13 players and four coaches who saw me day in and day out.

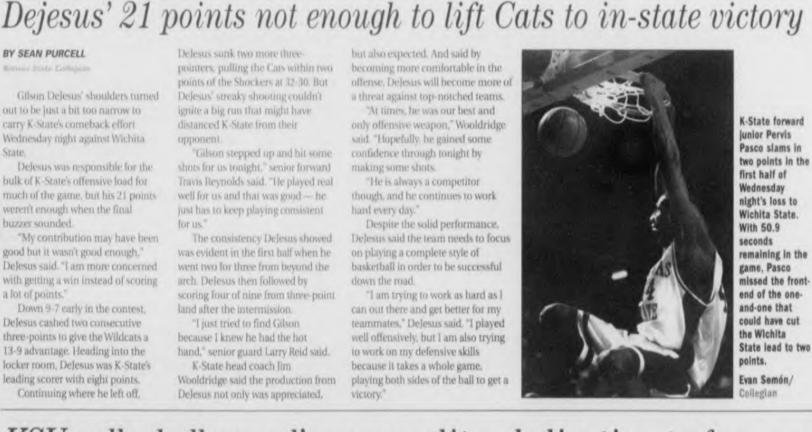

But to me, they did things well this season, and they did it with style. It made my job a whole lot easier. K-State volleyball will win a national championship some day there is no doubt in my mind, because Fritz and company have that mentality And to the other teams in the nation - watch out.

"We are going to be one of the best team's in the country. We are getting closer every year," Fritz said. "We do things the right way, and we are surrounded by good people and good players, so it is going to happen eventually. People think we are crazy, but it will happen."

A church is a place of worship, but for Karen Savoca and Pete Heitzman, it's home.

The musical duo, performing for the Birdhouse Concert Series on Friday night, said they were looking for a country home in upstate New York when they heard about the church "With the church came a 150, or 175year-old cemetery," Savoca said, "It's actually quite peaceful. It inspires me. Musical inspirations for the duo include multi-dimensional artists, such as Jimi Hendrix, James Taylor and Sly and the Family Stone, Heitzman said. "We love such a broad mix of music," Heitzman said, "Most of it, though, probably has the common thread of being rhythm-based." Both Savoca and Heitzman said they don't categorize their sound.

"People think I'm being evasive when I won't describe the music." Heitzman said. "After they hear us, they tend to understand and agree that it's hard to describe."

Savoca said the sound is original.

"The only way I can describe it is to say it's a blend of all the things we both love," Savoca said. "It's all of our influences, talents and styles meshed together."

David Kamerer, cofounder of the Birdhouse Concert Series, said the music is complex.

"It reminds me o early Joni Mitchell.

but with much broader boundaries," Kamerer said. "There's greasy blues riffs, different rhythm-based sounds, different musical themes - it's all over the

"Karen is a phenomenal performer," Heitzman said. "She's one of the few people I can honestly say was born to sing. The daughter of a singer from the 1950s Big Band Era, Savoca said music has always been a big part of her "I've always wanted to be a singer, even before I was conscious of what that meant," Savoca said. "I remember singing along to records at a very young age, then writing my own songs as a teen and just loving it all.

While Savoca's mother supported her singing, Savoca said her father had a few reservations.

"He was concerned about the security of it," she said. "He wanted me to go to school so I'd have something to fall back on. I got an education degree, but haven't had to fall on it yet."

In their 20th year of recording music, Savoca said she loves what she does.

"My goals as a musician are pretty simple," she said. 'I just want to not repeat myself. I want to keep my music fresh and keep growing as an artist.'

Heitzman said his goals also are fairly simple. "I just want to be able to play, because I love it," Heitzman said. "It's great to be able to make a living at it, so I don't have to resort to a factory job or becoming a lawyer or something. It makes me happy.

Savoca and Heitzman recently scored brother James Savoca's feature film, Sleepwalk, which was a hit at the South by Southwest Film Festival 2000 in Austin, Texas, Savoca has released four albums, the most recent being 1999's "Here We Go," with Heitzman joining her on each album.

INSURANCE

"We would have made every attempt to not cut programs, but we would have to tighten up," Raydon Robel, director of recreational services, said. "Fortunately, the privilege fee committee has seen this need. Hopefully, the prices will come back down."

The Union will go before the Senate at the beginning of next semester. Insurance for athletic buildings also will increase, but they are self insured and are not paid for with student fees.

Bishop said the university still is negotiating with the vendor for the exact cost. The new contract will begin Dec. 15.

"Nothing is definite and anything can change," Bishop said, "but the proposed price increased, and so did the deductible.

The negotiations include clarifying fuzzy areas for what they are proposing, she said, like how lowering the deductible would affect the cost of insurance goodbye to KSU Stadium in style, as K-State recorded a 24-3 win against the Tigers to become bowl eligible for the ninth straight time.

The Wildcat defense also was in firm grasp of its second shutout of the season before Missouri's Brad Hammerich booted a 39-yard field goal in the game's final seconds.

Eleven games and six wins later, K-State prepares to take on the No. 18 Syracuse Orangemen on Dec. 29 in Phoenix, Ariz., in the Insight.com Bowl.

Although his team fell short of some of its loftier goals, Snyder said his team is proud of how they handled the early-season adversity.

"I'm pleased that we've gotten here," Snyder said.

"The season didn't progress as we had hoped, but we certainly believe that we have made some progress throughout the final stages of the season, and we're just honored to have the opportu-

SANTA

he decided to try on Santa's shoes for a while because he loves kids and needed some extra money.

"It helps with the Christmas bills," Boyles said. "And it's a good way to talk to kids and to bring the holiday spirit to them."

He said that a lot of times, kids will get overly excited to see him. But when they get closer, they are so shocked they can't talk.

"They just sit there and their eyes will get all big," Boyles said. "You just have to come up with little gimmicks to get them to warm up.

Telling them that candy canes are reindeer food is one gimmick that works. Boyles said.

"I love it," he said, when he can make the kids feel at ease.

Reflections Photography has worked with the mall to provide Santa for the last five years. Bobby Nixon, who's in charge of finding Santa for the company, said he and his wife, the owner, love doing this each Christmas.

"We just enjoy the time we get to spend with the kids, seeing them smile when they see Santa - seeing them still believe," he said.

He said that for many, going to see Santa is part of the holiday tradition. It is an important part, he said.

"It's important they are able to believe at that early age - to believe in Santa," Nixon said.

Though children between the ages of 3 to 5 are Santa's typical visitor, Boyles said college students, couples in their 40s and 50s, and even a 103-year-old woman have come to see him, too.

"They range from all ages," he said. "I think they like it just as much as the little kids do."

Santa Claus is a staple for the holiday season, Boyles said, because it keeps the Christmas spirit alive.

"Having Santa is a good thing," he said. "I really don't know of any other program that could spread this kind of cheer through the community."

Student found dead in Tuttle

Matt Stamey/Collegian

A search-and-rescue helicopter files over Carnahan Creek after law enforcement officials removed an unidentified body from Tuttle Creek Reservoir on Thursday, north of Manhattan. Officials were searching for K-State students Timothy Bennett, Kyle Chapman and Christopher Shipley.

Timeline of events

Between 2 and 3 p.m. - Three K-State freshmen were last seen leaving for a sailing excursion at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

5:15 p.m. - The three students were reported missing to the Riley County Police

■ 5:30 p.m. to midnight — A search, headed by RCPD, was conducted at the reservoir.

■ 8 a.m. - Search resumed for missing students.

■ 9 a.m. - Rescue helicopter spotted the capsized sailboat near Camahan Cove, about 2 miles north of Blue Valley Yacht Club where the students departed from. About 9:15 a.m. - The body of Timothy Michael Bennett, 19, freshmen in environmental design from Kansas City, Mo., was found near the shore of the cove. ■ 5:30 p.m. - Rescue operation ended with two students still missing. Officials said there would be a low chance of survival.

5 a.m. - Recovery operation resumed at the reservoir.

The search resumed this morning for two missing K-State students at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Kyle David Chapman, 17, freshman in computer science. and Christopher Nathan Shipley. 18, freshman in animal science. both from Olathe. Kan., are still missing after an intensive search of the reservoir Thursday. The body of Timothy Michael Bennett, 19, freshman in environmental design from Kansas City. Mo., was found Thursday morning wearing a life jacket.

Rescuers have made the switch from a search-and-rescue to a recovery operation, said Brian McNulte, operational manager for Tuttle Creek State Park.

He said he doubted if the two students were alive, but if they were, he said there would be a low chance of survival because of heavy winds and low temperatures Thursday night.

Police speculated that Bennett died of hypothermia. Water temperatures have been around 49 degrees since Tuesday, Officials also said the students probably were wearing warm-weather clothing because of Tuesday's highs in the 60s.

"A person in water will lose these temperatures," McNulte said. "That's why we're speculating hypothermia at this time."

McNulte said foul play is not suspected.

"The only thing we were informed of is they were just going out for a day of sailing,

The individuals were last seen between 2 and 3 Tuesday afternoon before leaving to go sailing and were reported missing at 5:15 p.m. Wednesday.

On the morning of Sept. 11, suicide bombers hijacked four commercial airliners, launching the deadliest terrorist attack ever committed on U.S. soil.

The twin towers burned and collapsed, killing thousands. Hundreds more died in an attack on the Pentagon and aboard the fourth plane that crashed in Pennsylvania.

Unlike World War II, no formal war was

"It's becoming more complex, more

Nicholls finalist for CSU provost

BY SARAH BAHARI

Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Peter Nicholls has been announced as one of three candidates for the provost position at Colorado State University.

Nicholls was out of the office Thursday and could not be reached for comment.

Associate Dean of Arts and Sciences Stephen White said he has not discussed it with Nicholls vet.

"At this point, it's a personal issue,"

Nicholls spoke at an open forum at CSU on Wednesday to a group of about 40 people, according to the Blocky Mountain Collegian.

The provist has to be the person who will lead the campus in the development of its vision for the future," Nicholls said at the forum.

The pool of candidates started at 35, but has been narrowed down to three, said Tony Frank, vice president for research and information technology.

All three candidates are on campus this week interviewing, meeting with officials and speaking at a forum.

he attacks on Sept. 11 gave us a new vision of the world. We learned how precious life, liberty and freedom are.

Today is the anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Dec. 7 brought America into World War II.

It was a day that thrust our grandparents' generation into action. They had to fight for their country. Today, we temember those who stood up and sacrificed themselves for our freedom.

The events on Sept. 11 will have the same ring in the heart of our nation in years to come. We will never forget the day our sense of security and comfort was shook to the core. In 20 years, when we remember Sept. 11, we will remember not only the fear, but the patriotism and the way our nation bound together.

The virtual shield over our eyes has been removed. Some of us may no longer be blind to the harsh realities of the world.

This semester we have learned so much about life out of the classroom. We have learned how incredibly precious

We have lost five fellow K-Staters.

Thursday, one K-State student's body was found - Timothy Michael Bennett, and two are missing, Kyle David Chapman and Christopher Nathan Shipley.

We also lost Lance Christopher Donley and Ion Ryan Loderd before Thanksgiving break. We send our condolences to the families and friends of the deceased.

We need to remember the lives of all who died Sept. 11 and all those who have died within our community. We also need to continue living and never forget how precious each day is.

Nation's generosity should extend to all Americans in need

The amount of money donated this year to charities related to the terrorist attacks is incredible. The numbers are so large, they're almost mind-boggling It seems like everyday stories in the news spout how much this company or that donated to organizations dedicated to helping the victims of terrorism Take, for example, the Campbell Soup Co. According to the Red Cross Web site, Campbell's has matched their employees donations, 2-1, for a total of $322,000.

There are countless other companies following suit. Many are encouraging their employees and customers to make donations. which they will match.

Other companies are donating services and merchandise like Compaq. Compaq provided the Red Cross with computer equipment to use for disaster relief. They also helped the charitable organization develop a victim registration system. Ty, the company that produces Beanie Babies, and Kohl's department stores also are contributing. These companies are producing patriotic menhandise, and 100 percent of the proceeds are going to the Red Cross.

These donations of money, time, services and equipment give me hope, It's amazing to see our nation come together to support one another in a time like this. It shows the rest of the world what it means to be American

All of the businesses who contributed money should be applauded. So should all of the individuals who gave money. Everyone who bought a ribbon in commemoration of Sept. 11, donated blood or sent money to a relief fund deserves a pat on the back Although all of these contributions give me hope, they make me wonder at the same time.

Sarah McCaffrey

Everyone was able to reach into their pocket and contribute a few dollars to a worthy cause. Certainly no one has gone broke from giving. And after everyone pitched in, the results were amazing. Millions of dollars were raised to help the victims the extraordinary tragedy.

But what about the victims of all of the "ordinary" tragedies? I know it sounds like an coymoron, that a tragedy is ordinary, but really, they happen every day. The victims of domestic violence are ordinary tragedies. The homeless veterans who sleep on the cold street every night are ordinary tragedies. The malnourished and diseased children of African nations are ordinary tragedies.

For some reason, it's too easy to sweep these ordinary tragedies under the rug. We know of their suffering. We know their situation has remained the same. We read news stories and see TV commercials begging us to Somehow we don't think it affects us like seem to forget about their sufferings. Maybe we don't think it's our problem. Maybe we the attacks on the security and peace of mind of our nation.

These ordinary tragedies do affect us, and they deserve just as much support and attention as the victims of the terrorist tragedies. The victims of abuse, the homeless, the starving children here or abroad affect our communities. They threaten the fabric of our

As a nation, we are proud we have risen to the challenge to support one another when we thought we needed it the most. We have rejoiced in our giving.

But are we proud of the way we support the disadvantaged of our great nation? Have we supported them the same way we supported the victims of the terrorist tragedy?

Do we brag about our welfare system? Do we showcase our Medicare and Medicaid systems? And what about Social Security?

In a time of such great giving, it's important not to forget others who still need, and have always needed, our support.

Volunteers deserve thanks for AIDS Awareness 2001

For the past week, World AIDS Day has been the center of activities for several campus organizations. The 2001 theme is "I care. Do you?" Each year (and for 20 years) we are reminded that NO ONE deserves to suffer from HIV and AIDS. And with research and newer medications, there is hope for the future. I applaud the following who have contributed so much to promote AIDS Awareness 2001.

Recent World AIDS Day events were successful due to the coordinated efforts of many. Amy Mauk, a student intern for Lafene Health Center, has been active in S.H.A.P.E. (Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators) for six semesters, making more than 35 presentations to student groups. For World AIDS Day 2001 she arranged to have Tiger by the Tale, a theater group, present skits about responsible sexual behavior. She also coordinated the six-member panel discussion in the Union Courtyard. Many students were able to bear, learn and ask questions about HIV/AIDS as a result of her tremendous efforts.

Funding for Tiger by the Tale and the Kansas AIDS red ribbon pins was provided by the K-State Communicable Disease Committee. The committee members led by Dori Lambert and Bob Burgess seek to educate and prevent such diseases as HIV/AIDS.

Volunteer panel discussion members featured Bret Turner, Topeka; Don Fallon, Chaplain Services, K-State; Dori Lambert, Counseling Services, K-State; Stacey Broughman, Riley County Health Department: Victor Force and Sherrel Johnson, Regional AIDS Project, Manhattan. Each of these individuals is dedicated in their efforts to prevent the spread of HIV. Thank you for answering our many questions and reaching out to help where needed.

Several information tables were available in conjunction with the panel discussion. Clay Myers-Bowman and Ginny Stohs provided HIV/AIDS information from the Riley County Chapter of the American Red Cross. Other information and resources were provided by the Regional AIDS Project, the Riley County Health Department, S.H.A.P.E. and UPC

The S.H.A.P.E. Quilt Panel Committee members led by Tiffany Blake designed and crafted the beautiful quilt panel dedicated in memory of Kelly Roberts. Roberts, a May 2001 K-State graduate, AIDS activist and mentor to the S.H.A.P.E. members, died in July 2001. In the past, she frequently reminded us that "no one deserves the suffering that accompanies AIDS." Robert's quilt panel will be incorporated into a section of the national Names Project Quilt (AIDS Quilt).

Many thanks to Erica Smith and the Union Program Council for their efforts in arranging the Names Project Quilt displayed in Union Courtyard. The quilt section was 12 x 12 feet, consisting of individual panels that are 3 x 6 feet in size. Each panel is representative of the approximate size of a coffin. Because of the sensitivity of this memorial, it is admirable that the UPC displayed the quilt in an easily accessible area, so that many could view it and pay tribute to those who have died.

Lastly, Lurge you (Collegian readers) to do what you can to prevent the spread of HIV. If applicable, get tested. If you don't know if you are at risk, call Lafene Health Center, 532-6595, or the Riley County Health Department, 776-4779. Counseling and confidential testing are

Construction of new 91.9 studio to begin in Union over break

Kansas State Collegian

After more than 50 years of broadcasting in Manhattan, KSDB-FM 91.9 finally will move to a visible location on campus.

In September, Student Senate passed a one-time allocation of $64,178 to help fund the station's move to the second floor of the K-State Student Union.

Construction for the new station will begin Dec. 17 and is expected to be finished in mid-February, said Bernard Pitts, executive director of the Union.

Now located on the third floor of McCain Auditorium, the station has not seen major improvements to its equipment or facilities since 1975. The move will put KSBD at the forefront of radio technology in Manhattan, Candice Walton, station manager, said

"We are building a totally new radio station, new boards, mics. furniture and computers," Walton said. "In my opinion, we will be better than all the other stations in Manhattan.'

Walton said the funds allocated from student fees will pay primarily for the new equipment for the station. The actual building of the facility in the Union will be funded by the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

"It was always in our enhancement project for the union, but with our limited funds, it was unaffordable at the time," Pitts

The building of the station was awarded to the Ken Ebert Design Group of Manhattan. Pitts said the Ebert design group also designed the renovations for the Union, so the plans for the new station should flow nicely into the existing architecture.

"The best part is that the final bid for construction was less that expected," Pitts said.

The money that was saved in the building of the station will be used for more new equipment, Walton said.

In September, SGA also allocated a three year annual budget to the station of $12,193, which will go to the repairing of existing equipment.

The new station will share the space at the east side of the second floor with the Multicultural Student Organization.

"It's going to have a production studio, reception area and broadcast studio," Matt Jolly, program director, said. "The only disadvantage that I can see will be the fact that the entire staff will be located in a different building."

The offices of the radio station staff will remain in McCain.

'Visibility is the key. No one knows where we are at right now. Everyone will be able to see us in the Union. We will be a bigger part of the community," Jolly said. Walton said she expects the popularity of the station to grow with the move to the Union

"It is a win-win situation for everyone," Walton said. "Students will have better access to the station. The extra foot traffic will be good for the growth and abilities of future staff members, which could lead to better production and better underwriting.'

Taliban agrees to surrender Kandahar if U.S. promises Omar's safety

BY KATHY GANNON

The Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan - The Taliban agreed Thursday to surrender Kandahar, their last bastion and birthplace, if their warriors were not punished and safety was guaranteed to leader Mullah Mohammed Omar, who once vowed to fight to the death. America said it would not accept any deal allowing the cleric to go free.

The promise to give up the city and begin handing over weapons as early as Friday marked the final collapse of the militant movement that imposed strict Islamic rule on Afghanistan for five Personal rivalries among anti-Taliban leaders and the fate of Omar still could wreck the fragile agreement. The head of the new Afghan transition government, Hamid Karzai, refused to say whether Omar would be arrested as Washington has demanded.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said the United States would not stand for any agreement that lets the Taliban leader go free and live in the Taliban is now upon us," said British Prime Minister Tony Blair, President Bush's closest ally in the war. "That is a total vindication of the strategy that we have worked out from the beginning."

The former Taliban ambassador to Pakistan seemed to agree. When asked about the future of the movement, Salam Zaeef said: "I think we should go

The murky surrender pact made no mention of Osama bin Laden, accused of masterminding the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, and left unclear the fate of hundreds of Arabs, Pakistanis, Chechens and other foreign fighters of his al-Qaeda terrorist network.

After briefing members of the Senate on the situation in Afghanistan. Rumsfeld was asked whether the United States would insist on U.S. justice or would agree to let an international tribunal deal with Omar.

"We would prefer to have Omar," Rumsfeld replied. He said There's still a good deal of confusion surrounding the Meanwhile, in eastern Afghanistan. B-52s harnmered suspected mountain hideouts of bin Laden and his fighters. About 1,500 anti-Taliban forces have been attacking the region around the Tora Bora compound for two days.

In Washington, U.S. officials said al-Qaeda fighters are believed to be operating from five to 10 cave complexes at Tora Bora in the White Mountains south of Jalalabad. Officials suspect that bin Laden is in the area but also are on alert for his presence in the south around Kandahar Southwest of that city, U.S. Marines went on alert and fired mortars and flares into the desert from their base after detecting what a spokesman said appears to be a credible threat.

A UHN-1 Huey helicopter crashed near the airstrip at Camp Rhino, and Marine spokesman Capt. Stewart Upton said two servicemen received minor injuries, one of them on the

Many of the unconfirmed details of the surrender agreement came from Zaeef who said a former guerrilla leader from the war against the Soviets, Mullah Nagib Ullah, would take control of Kandahar within days.

'Mullah Omar has taken the decision for the welfare of the people, to avoid casualties and to save the life and dignity of Afghans," Zaeef said, explaining the cleric's dramatic shift from earlier vows to defend his movement's home city until death.

Karzai said the Taliban also agreed to give up provinces surrounding Kandahar which had remained under their control. The Taliban never held sway over all Afghanistan, but before U.S. bombing began Oct. 7, the militant militia held 90 percent of the country.

Under the withering U.S. air attacks in support of the Northern Alliance, the Taliban abandoned most of their ground, retreating to Kandahar and neighboring provinces. Bush launched the attacks after the Taliban refused to hand over bin Laden.

Differences over the surrender deal among anti-Taliban forces arose as quickly as the fuzzy details of the agreement were made public.

Zaeef said the surrender called for Omar to live in Kandahar under the protection of the new local administration, which apparently prompted the negative response from Rumsfeld.

Karzai sought to avoid any discussion of Omar's fate, telling The Associated Press that such issues "are the details that we still have to work

"I'm not saying anything right now," he said. He refused to say whether Omar would face arrest

Another anti-Pashtun leader, Gul

Agha, was angered over being left out of the negotiations, according to his spokesman, Abdul Jabbar. The spokesman said Agha would not agree to any role for Naqib Ullah because he was an ally of the Taliban.

The nature of the apparent threat that put the Marine base on alert was unclear. The lights were cut after officers detected what Capt. David Romley said appears to be a credible

Cats playing 1st road game of year at Northwestern

BY DEREK BOSS Kansas State Collegian

t might be a good time for K-State to hit the road. Head coach Jim Wooldridge seems to think so, after the Wildcats 65-56 loss to Wichita State on Wednesday night concluded the team's six-game homestand to start the season. "I just think we need a change - just a change - to get us out to a new environment and gets us together on the road," Wooldridge said, "to see if we can't band together a little bit more. Those kind of things, those kind of reasons."

Fortunately for Wooldridge, the schedule is cooperative.

K-State (4-2) travels to Welsh-Ryan Arena in Evanston, Ill., this Saturday for a 7 p.m. tip with Northwestern (4-1), who is off to its best start since the 1998-99 season, when they opened 5-1.

The Wildcats haven't been in action in over a week, with their last outing a 57-50 win over Florida State in the final game of the ACC/Big Ten Challenge on Nov. 28.

Jitim Young and Winston Blake led Northwestern with 19 and 18 points. respectively, with Young's performance earning him Big Ten Co-Player of the Week honors. The 6-foot-2 sophomore guard ranks third in the conference in scoring at 17.2 points per game and first in steals (3.0

Forwards Winston Blake (15.6 ppg) and Tavaras Hardy (13.4 ppg) also post doubledigit scoring figures for the Wildcats, and return with four starters and eight letterwinners from head coach Bill Carmody's 11-19 record last season, including 11th in the conference (3-13).

Meanwhile, K-State players must rid their minds of Wednesday night's loss to the Shockers, which Wooldridge addressed after the game.

"What I told our team was, 'We're all disappointed - coaches, players, fans, and so on and so forth. Isn't it amazing how one ball game can make you feel?" Wooldridge said. "And we each have to be accountable for what happened, all of us that are involved in this, and find a way

"Whether it's on the road at Northwestern or wherever we go, the month of December we're going to have to find some answers, and that's where we are

Many of those answers stem from the Cats' offensive struggles, which were especially evident against Wichita State's zone defense. K-State shot 37-percent for the game, and just 25-percent from three-point range in the first half. "We've just got to come out and play better," senior guard Larry Reid said. "We're probably going to see zone again and again throughout this season, and we've just got to learn how to play against it. We have to put this loss behind us and and look forward to the next game, and go out to win it.

"As soon as practice starts, you've got to put it behind you. There's nothing you can do about it. We've got to look down the road, not in the past K-State's two leading scorers, Reid and Travis Reynolds, struggled a bit against Wichita State. Reid managed 11 points, but shot just 3-of-12 from the floor and 1-of-6 from beyond the arc, and Reynolds battling an ankle injury, was limited to very few touches in the paint, despite notching nine points and seven rebounds. The loss left Reynolds discouraged.

We've always got to protect our home court," he said. "You can't just let people come in your house and take wins from

But Wooldridge said he expects some discouragement, although that feeling can't inhibit the Cats' performance in upcoming games.

"I don't think anybody feels good about our team right now, but I've got to tell you, I've been in this situation before, Wooldridge said.

"There's going to be a lot of people who lose faith, but I'm really concerned about the 14 guys in that locker room not losing faith. That's where we have to be centered

'I think we're going to find out just how fragile these guys are.

Allcomers meet set for today

BY ERIKA SAUERWEIN Kansas Stato Collegian

Ahearn Field House is going to be a little busy this weekend.

Fifteen schools and over 600 athletes, including Olympians, will compete in the Kansas State University Allcomers Meet starting at 11 a.m today. The meet will continue at 10 a.m. Saturday.

"It is very early for a track meet, but this gives the kids a chance to compete," head coach Cliff Rovelto said. "They train a long time without competing. It is something for them to look forward

Senior Keil Regehr is just one of the athletes ready to perform.

"The Allcomers Meet is a good time," he said. "There is always a good crowd there, and that's what is nice about indoor track. Everything is right there. Having so many people there just adds to the atmosphere.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said the Allcomers Meet can get a little stressful,

"It is definitely a sizable meet, and it is larger than we want," he said. "It is like a hodgepodge. There is going to be different people at different levels. As far as we are concerned, it is like a glorified

Rovelto said the meet has a different meaning for each individual. He said about a third of the team is looking to post some good marks, while others look to the meet as practice. For others, it is a

"There is an extreme range of talent at the meet," Rovelto said. "You have people like Rebekah Green who could throw a national qualifying mark, and then on the other hand, you have someone who has to prove to us that he or she deserves to be back with us next semester, so it is hard to generalize."

Since the cross-country season just ended, Rovelto said K-State is holding out about 10 of its runners for the meet. Regehr, however, is the exception. The senior dealt with an injured hamstring all season and wasn't able to compete. His 3000-meter race at the Allcomers Meet will be the first of the year for

"I am excited," Regehr said. "I want to go in there and get my first crack at a

For others, it will be their first ever meet as a Wildcat. Freshmen Gaven Jones and Lisa Beachler said they both are excited but anxious for the competi-

"I am very nervous," said Jones, who is running the 400 meters and the 4x400 relay. "I just want to go into the meet and see where I am and then measure from that. I am not really worried about placing. I am more concerned with my

Beachler said she doesn't feel quite

"You can never feel ready enough for your first college meet," she said. "And the fact that I just found out that I am going to be in a K-State uniform instead of competing as an independent just makes me even more nervous.

"I will set goals a little longer down the road. I am going to see how I do here and then just hopefully progress."

Progression will be a team goal,

"I think both teams will be very good," he said. "The women are capable of scoring more points this year and the men are much more improved.

"The meet gives us a chance to see where everyone is at in their training. I hope we survive."

Football player deserves Heisman recognition for varied talents

The day is finally here.

Call it an omen that my very last column of the fall semester falls on my 21st birthday, but that's just how things worked out. Kinda cool, actually. But to your complete and utter disarray - I'm sure - I won't be spending the next 15 column inches talking about how "tired" I'm going to be after Thursday night. Instead, let's talk a little football.

Besides the never-ending controversy right now in the BCS picture, with BYU even threatening to sue if they're not selected as an at-large big (which won't happen). Saturday is going to be a great day for

> Whether the Cornhuskers (11-1) get a shot at the national title this season-which isn't a far-off possibility with LSU's chances of upsetting Tennessee - Crouch will be holding the Heisman Trophy tomorrow night at the Marriott Marquis in New York City.

Nebraska QB Eric Crouch.

There, I said it.

view

Derek Boss

Crouch is my pick for this year's honor, and he deserves it.

He's thrown for 1,510 yards and seven touchdowns, and rushed for 1,115 yards and 19 TD's for No. 5 Nebraska.

People might knock him for the Huskers' Ione loss to Colorado in the Big Red's regular season finale, but CU's running game was just unstoppable. I think NU's linebackers had to have put some money on this one - against the 12-point spread,

The Huskers' D just got steamrolled. They struggled more than I did last night trying to pick up in Aggieville - thanks Plous for that extra shot on the house, by the way. Guys, isn't it lunny how being "tired" ruins any game you thought you had, or is it just me?

It probably is just me. But, back to the NU/CU contest. Just look at Crouch's numbers: 13-of-28 for 198 yards passing, and 162 yards rushing on 18 carries and two TD's. He had two late interceptions, but that didn't cost them the game. The (lack of) defense did.

So, Crouch is my undisputed favorite. but we'll go ahead and look at the other top three players in the running for the Florida QB Rex Grossman. This guy's numbers were through the roof, with 3,896 yards passing and 36 TD's for the No. 6 Gators. But he's only a sophomore, and he's just another prototype Florida QB in head coach Steve Spurrier's pass-happy offense.

Danny Wuerffel won the Heisman in 1996 after putting up big stats throughout his career, and Grossman will win a Heisman Trophy some day.

Miami QB Ken Dorsey. He's got the best team in the nation, hands down, but his talent might be a bit overshot. Dorsey did throw for 2,652 yards and 23 TDs to lead the Hurricanes' (11-0) to the Rose Bowl, but most people don't look at the other factors behind Miami's record.

Dorsey had a runningback, Clinton Portis, who rushed for 1,200 yards, and a defense that only gave up 9.4 points per game this season.

Just look at the Boston College contest.

students on the Pottawatomie side of the reservoir, near Carnahan Cove, because of wind conditions Wednesday.

The helicopter spotted the capsized sailboat near the cove at 9 a.m. Thursday, and Bennett's body was found by rescuers against the shoreline around 9:15 a.m.

The boat appeared to have no damage, but the keel and rudder were found detached from the main portion of the boat inseparate areas of the cove, officials said.

Carnahan Cove is about two miles from the Blue Valley Yacht Club where the students departed Tuesday in a yellow, 15 1/2-foot racing sailboat owned by Chapman.

Family members were at the site of the accident Thursday, Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said. Chapman and Shipley's families were informed that their two missing teen agers would most likely not be found alive.

'We have talked to the families," McNulte said, "We explained that we are now in recovery mode, and they accepted and understood the slim chance of survival.

Bosco said the three freshmen. who lived in Marlatt Hall, were popular students and Eagle Scouts who had a lot of experience around water.

"K-State's going to take this very hard," he said.

"These were three students that were close to finishing out their first semester at the university. They were very involved and others knew them. This is an unfortunate tragedy."

Bosco said the students were friends in high school. He said their scouting and sailing activities brought them together.

"Students and faculty are grieving for the loss of life," he said.

"They were good guys from the response we are receiving. It is a loss to the K-State community."

Four boats, a dog team and rescuers on horseback will participate in the operation today. McNulte said. He said there will be an extensive search of grassy areas and below the water. He said it is

Headstart moving to Eugene Field

BY ALYSON RALETZ

Kansas State Collegia

Headstart will find a permanent home and combine all of its Manhattan classrooms next year when its headquarters relocate to the Eugene Field Elementary School building.

On Nov. 20, the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Board of Education voted to close Bluemont and Eugene Field elementary schools.

Headstart, a federally-funded program that provides comprehensive education services to lowincome families, has a headquarters on Kimball Avenue, but has had to provide classes in Bluemont and Roosevelt elementary schools because of space constrictions.

'We're really excited about the move," Sally Frick, Headstart director, said. "This will allow us to have all of our classrooms under one roof.

"If the school district had not approved the closings, there would have been no opportunity for expansion. We would have had to purchase mobile units for our students.

Headstart serves more than 150 students in Manhattan and is continually growing, Frick said.

Because the program goes beyond classroom teaching and offers comprehensive services, she said parents whose children previously have been at Bluemont or Roosevelt will feel like they have a larger role in the program.

"The building will be more accessible to parents," she said. "They haven't felt a part of the bigger program before. They'll be able to walk in the building and feel supported in many ways other buildings couldn't offer."

She said there are many benefits, however, to having classrooms in the elementary schools.

"The Bluemont staff was absolutely amazing," she said. "They made the program such an important part of the school. We will miss them tremendously.

"As you can see, we have a lot of mixed emotions about this, but it will end up just fine. It will be an exciting move, but we valued the partnership between Bluemont and Headstart.

Lori Martin, Bluemont principal, said there are more volunteers at her school than children. Besides Bluemont programs, there are student Headstart volunteers.

Martin said there always are many Bluemont volunteers because of the school's proximity to K-State. It is more convenient for students to get to Bluemont than some of the other Manhattan schools, she said.

"Please don't stop volunteering when Bluemont is gone," Martin said. 'I'm trying to be optimistic, I would hope students look for volunteer opportunities in different

Even though Headstart is a program separate from Bluemont, she said it was a welcome addition.

"They are very much part our family," she said

Frick said the transition to the Eugene Field building will not change any of Headstart's services - it will only enhance them.

Teachers will be able to do more team teaching," she said. "They will share ideas and support each other. Also, the management teams will be more available to everyone.

She said she is not sure how soon the transition will take place, but the rest of the year will be spent planning structural changes. Since Headstart caters to children ages 3-5, the bathrooms and playground will undergo modifications.

She said she was not surprised to learn Headstart would get the building if the school board voted to close the schools.

"The administration has kept us very informed of the process," she said. "We knew there would be changes. We have been fortunate enough to be a part of the

Western store opens in Aggieville; business offers selection of handmade boots, gifts

Cowboy Palace, a new store in Aggieville, has something no other western store in Manhattan has an Australian Shepherd pup that roams the store freely.

"He'll be the first to greet you at the door," Jared Roberts, owner, said of Toby the dog.

Aside from Toby, shoppers can find boots, jeans, shirts, jewelry and rustic home furnishings at

Since their grand opening Nov. 17, Roberts said the store has done really well.

"The boots are a big deal," Roberts said. They are top quality. handmade and hand-lasted - the top end you can get.

He said the price of boots are a little more expensive, but one won't find a better boot. He said he even special orders handmade boots. Roberts said he takes eight to 10 different measurements to make sure the boot fits well.

Roberts also said the furniture has sold well. He said he finds mirrors, armeires, bookshelves, lamps and other handmade items in Mom-and-Pop stores in Texas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico. He drives to pick them up to save on "Some of the furniture is one of a kind. They are works of art. signed by the person who made them." Roberts said

With the opening of the store, Roberts said he is fulfilling a family tradition. Another tradition is participating in rodeos.

Roberts is a member of the Professional Rodeo Cowboy's Association. His grandfather, Gerald, is a two-time world champion in roden. After his rodeo career was over, Roberts said his grandfather opened Chap-Parel, a western retail store in Abilene, Kan. That is where the

"My dad worked for him making chaps, and I worked for him making chaps," he said.

Roberts said his family has been very supportive of his rodeo career. They have helped keep him on the road to compete. Working at his parents' western retail store, Roberts Western Outlitters, in Junction City also helped support his rodeo competitions

"Without my family, I couldn't do it," he said. "I owe everything to

At a rodeo last year in Buffalo. Minn., Roberts realized he needed something to fall back on after

"I got bucked off and broke my left ankle. I was there in the arena, and the EMT guys didn't come fast enough. I had to set my ankle myself. That's the hardest thing: I've ever had to do. I've been out ever since. I had two days of reflection, and I knew I needed decided to make the store a reality.

Roberts said working for his family and running Roberts' Western Outfitters for his parents the past couple of years has given him the tools to make his business a success. It also enables him to get away to the rodeo.

Roberts will start rodeoing again in January at a competition in Denver.

He said he expects the business to do well. A market exists in Manhattan that should support him on the road at rodeo competi-

'I'm excited to have a new retailer in Aggieville," Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said, "The store offers something in Aggieville that has never been there before that is, western wear, furniture and boots. They have a great location, and I expect them to do well."

Town Center offers patrons gift wrapping

When it comes down to it. some people like wrapping gifts more than actually giving the gifts.

"Lots of imagination and creativity goes into wrapping a gift," Hosai Ebadi, sophomore in business administration, said.

Ehadi said she enjoys wrapping gifts she buys for her family and friends.

"I put a lot of hard work into wrapping my gifts, and in the end when the package is finished, it's worth it," she said.

For those who do not like wrapping gifts, Manhattan Town Center offers several stores that do the wrapping for their customers. This year, Leather Direct.

located across from The Finish Line, is the official gift-wrapping store of the mall.

Brent Simonsson, owner of Leather Direct, said the staff at the store will wrap anything from any store kinesiology, works at The Buckle part time. She said wrapping a gift usually takes about five minutes when the store is not busy. About one week before Christmas, when the store gets really busy, customers might leave their items to be wrapped and come back for them later. she said.

Besides Leather Direct and The Buckle, Dillards and IC Penney also offer gift wrapping services.

Web sites, such as SuperPages.com, also offer giftwrapping suggestions for those people wrapping their own gifts.

Ellen Odgers, senior in family and consumer science education, said she has her gifts wrapped only when she is pressed for time. Otherwise, she likes to wrap the gifts herself.

"I like to personalize it," Odgers said

Gift wrapping tips

Measure the wrapping paper.
Give yourself about an extra inch

Remove price tags before wrapping the gift.

Fold corners to make them look

 Use name tags.
 Don't wait until the last minute. Use the same wrapping paper for gifts going to the same locations Use decorative bags and then recycle them for next year.

Decorate with ribbons, bows, yam, pine cones, etc. Use contrasting colors together, such as red and silver.

"It means more to me and the person receiving the gift when I wrap it myself."

Harrington passed for 2,415 yards and 23 TD's for the No. 3 Ducks, but his squeaker past Oregon State last weekend hurts his chances even more of a Heisman shot. Plus, he's not the national fan-favorite like the other candidates.

So there's my analysis — I think I'll just stick with Crouch. It's time for the Heisman to return to the Big 12.

apping paper, ribbon, tape and scissors all are laid out, ready for use at the Manhattan Arts Center. The materials available are part of the arts center's current show, "Wrap it Up," which encourages patrons to buy art as gifts and wrap it themselves on the spot. Terri Lee, executive director of the arts center, said the array of artists, have had to keep up with demand for their pieces in the show.

"Almost all the artists have had to replenish the show by bringing more of their work in since the show opened," she said. "One lady came in and bought 15 (Angelo) Garzio pieces for her kids. She said each year she buys them all pieces from a different artist."

Garzio makes functional flatware, which Lee said has been selling very well. Although not all of the show is functional. Lee said there are many pieces that are either usable or wearable, such as pins, lamps, chairs and flatware.

With over 50 artists, the diversity of the show is nearly overwhelming, Lee said.

'It's a banquet of art," she said.

A variety of artists are presented in the current show at Urban Design, "The Art of Design," with hopes that people will purchase some pieces as gifts, Deborah Minner, co-owner of Urban Design "A lot of people are buying the glass works as gifts.

and also the scarves lately." she said. The blown glass is from AIBO Glass of Topeka and includes many orbs in varying sizes as well as functional ware such as glasses and bowls. Minner said the orbs often sell well and many people have bought the flatware, too.

Christmas cards are part of the season, and Minner said handmade cards are available from Pearl Goldstein and Sarah Williams. Ranging between $4.50 and $6.50 Minner said they make great cards or they can just be framed.

"The ones by Sarah Williams are all one-of-a-kind and the ones by Pearl are color copies at the original size of the painting, and only 10 were made of each card," she said.

Minner said the work from the show has been selling well.

"We've been letting people take things as they're sold, so it's starting to look kind of bare," she said.

Several of the artists were students of K-State ceramics professor Voshiro Ikeda, Nelson said.

schools in the United States, and a lot of people don't know it." he said. "People don't realize it, but Yoshi is a very important artist. Another display in the gallery is adorned with ceramic fantastical creatures such as an angry. winged cow, a frog prince and a flying elephant. Nelson said the pieces, by former K-State professor Eric Abraham. are inspired by nursery rhymes, and the low prices make them ideal gifts.

"These are all one-of-a-kind, none of them are molds," he said. These are great unique Christmas gifts for childrens' rooms.

The Christmas season is a good time to support local arts, Lee said.

"It's a chance to get local art into local homes,"

Student artist accepts two international awards BY JJ DUNCAN Komas State Collegion

It's been a busy semester for Todd Shanafelt.

After traveling to both Seoul, Korea, and Valencia, Spain, to accept awards for his sculpture motivated "It makes me feel like Royale Café there's so much out there," he said. "If I ever feel like I'm out of ideas, I just have to kick myself in the rear-end and say 'There's a whole world out there with so many ideas."

After finding out about the $10,000 prize he won in Korea. Shanafelt was informed that he placed second in the competition in Spain and that he won another $3,000 for his entry.

Shanafelt spent the first week in October in Korea and was in Spain Nov. 22-26, while accompanied by his wife, Rebecca Shanafelt, senior in life science, both times. He said it was nice because he would have felt guilty going without her.

"She loves to travel and see new things," he said. "And the trips are nice because we didn't really have much of a honeymoon.

The experience in Korea gave Shanafelt a different perspective on the art world. He said a complex the size of a large city block was erected just for the event and it was important to the city of Seoul.

There were four other winners in their respective categories at the event.

Shanafelt said it was all so large that he didn't feel like his work was worth the attention.

"They brought us all on stage and it felt like we had won the lottery or something," he said. "Everyone was taking pictures, and everyone was in suits and ties. They gave us each a trophy and a bouquet. and the mayor gave us gifts.

"It was the epitome of being spoiled. They were very generous and hospitable."

The prizes, as well as the fact that Shanafelt is graduating in May likely will mean an increase in the value of his art, said Deborah Minner, coowner of Urban Design.

"I've been strongly encouraging people to collect his work," she said. "From the first show that he did here, I knew he was doing something cutting edge and his work was very well-made."

Shanafelt said both of the prizes made him feel more secure in his future as an artist, but he still feels like he needs to perfect his craft. He said he is excited to see what he canachieve in the future because right now he is winning competitions with what he calls mediocre work.

"My work is on the right track, but it still needs to be tightened up." he said. "This is the best work I've ever done, but I want to take it further."

Minner said if people seework of his they like, they should get it quickly.

"He destroys his work often," she said. "If it doesn't sell or get in a show, he just smashes it and throws it away."

After experiencing the international art world, Shanafelt said he has maintained several contacts, which might prove useful in the future, but he doesn't want to get caught up in the politics. that come with showing art.

"You can really get sucked into this game of making the right contacts," he said, "But I want to be sincere and not just get to know someone to say I know that person."

As an artist, Shanafelt said his goal is to create timeless work.

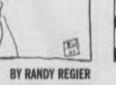

"I want to be able to keep my art contemporary as I can for as long as I can," he said. "I don't ever want anyone to look at it like a '60s painting where you can tell what time period it came from. I want to be ahead of the times for a long here's a reason so many squirrels are scurrying about on campus. They're busy," said Schanee Anderson, Sunset Zoological Park's curator of education.

Winter's coming, and squirrels are gathering as many nuts and resources as possible while putting on pounds for cold days.

> "There's a readily available food source and habitat for them on campus," she said, referring to the trees that produce nuts and provide

Since the Flinthills has an abundance of trees. squirrels are more common in Manhattan than in western Kansas, Anderson said. Spring is another time when squirrels are out and about, she said, because it's right after birthing season.

"That's when squirrels are out trying to be squirrels," she said. One thing people don't always realize is

A squirrel peeks how smart squirrels are. "They outsmart us," Schance said. There are devices to keep squirrels off bird feeders, but they manage to do it 99 percent of the time.

Christal Pollock, clinical instructor for the College of Veterinary Medicine, said a squirrel's intelligence is limited.

A feisty little squirrel ponders his next move while he is annoyed by yet another photographer trying to capture all of his squirrely beauty.

"They go by instinct," Pollock said. They can only handle so much stress." Another thing people should realize is that squirrels can bite, she said.

"Think about the teeth on a beaver. Squirrel teeth are like that, but on a smaller scale," Pollock said. "They should be treated with respect."

Anderson said the community is fortunate to have so many squirrels.

"Their antics can brighten up a gloomy day after a hard final," she said. "Whether they're screaming or chirping or fluffing their tails when they're upset or climbing on telephone lines."

Squirrel facts

Q: How long do squirrels live?
A: Squirrels have been known to live as long as 15 years in captivity, but in the wild, few squirrels live long lives due to weather, predators and other dangers. The everage lifespan of a squirrel in the wild is five to six years, depending on the circum-

Q: Do squirrels make good pets? A: No. It is illegal to keep a wild animal, such as a squirrel, without a permit in some states. Secondly, it's not fair to the animal. If for no other reason, please consider the damage a squirrel could do to your house.

Q: How do I get squirrels out of my attic? A: Try soaking cotton balls in peppermint oil and placing them around the attic. It's not an unpleasant smell for humans, but it is too strong for squirrels. Please consider doing this before setting live traps and relocating the squirrels. The squirrel you relocate could be a mother, and the babies surely won't survive without her.

Q: Do squirrels remember where they bury

A: No. While some of the nuts are retrieved, the rest either are found by other squirrels or remained buried. The good news is that some of those buried nuts. sprout into saplings.

Q: Squirrels are digging in my potted plants! What can I do?

A: Try putting river rocks on top of the soil after you've potted your plants. Make sure no soil is visible to the squirrels. Your pots and boxes will be heavier, but this has proven to be a valuable aid to keeping squirels from uprooting our plants

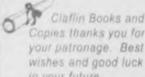

Q: I've found a baby squirrel. Now what do everyday citizens wearing gas masks and gloves to open their bills and letters flashed across television.

And even in Manhattan, people were affected. Seaton Hall was evacuated after a white, powdery substance was found. It turned out to be chalk dust.

And in offices across campus, they too, put on gloves — and some even masks — as a heightened security measure.

Sheri Staten, supervisor of records at the Office of Student Financial Ald, said some still wear gloves. People aren't as frightened as before, but it's better to be safe than sorry, she said.

Things will never be the same —there will always be a greater level of awareness and concern, she said.

"We're just kind of accepting that the way things are done will be different now. Since 9-11, everyone's lives have changed enormously," she said. "And for us, too."

It was a vision that made an entire nation pause.

Two planes crashing into the World Trade Center. People running for their lives. Fires burning. Buildings collapsing.

Whether it was for a few minutes, hours, days or months, people stopped and thought.

"People thought about their priorities," said Charlotte Shope Olsen, extension specialist for the School of Family Studies and Human Services. "They started thinking about how they spend each day."

They reached out to friends, family and their communities, she said. They searched for security. For a sense of belonging, she said. For anything that was familiar.

They evaluated their lives. They got more involved in the community, she said. They might have even volunteered. Talked to a stranger. Or reconnected with their families.

Even if only for a second, a nation — a world — paused.

The hero lessons Carlene Frost teaches eighth-graders are taking a new turn this year.

Frost, an Anthony Middle School English teacher, usually has students do research on people they idolize and make presentations about personal heroes. With the national recognition of New York City policemen, firefighters and health care officials, students wrote letters to Manhattan policemen, firefighters and Mercy Health Center staff.

She said while many people have written letters to New York, it's time to recognize those in our own town.

"They're just expressing their appreciation and saying they're glad they are here. These are local people who literally hold our lives in their hands," Frost said. "There's a greater awareness of how important these people are."

For the personal hero unit, some students are doing comic book heroes and sports figures, while others are tying in Sept. 11. There are students doing presentations about friends and family at Fort Riley.

"The presence at Fort Riley is more meaningful now," she said. "There's more on the patriotic theme this year."

Muslims were called on to defend their beliefs.

They said theirs was a peaceful religion — one of virtue and self-control — not hatred and destruction.

But still, some linked Islam to violence. In Manhattan, police officers guarded the local mosque. In Lawrence, Muslim students reported receiving threats on campus. In Texas, six windows of a mosque were shot out. And in Internet chat rooms, racial slurs were abundant.

People knew little about Islam, and that ignorance could be dangerous, said
Mohammad Al-Deeb, president of the Muslim Student Association.

Muslim Student Association.

"In this crisis, I think some people missed the point that Islam is a peaceful religion," he said. "They think being an attacker is Islam. They think Islam teaches that, and that followers of Islam must be carbon copies of Osama bin Laden."

That isn't true, Muslims say. And they will continue to educate people while standing by their beliefs.

People who had never donated blood rushed to local blood banks.

Lines formed. People had to be turned away. Too many donors at once, officials said.

Wallets were whipped out and checks were written — not to stores, but to charities. It helped ease feelings of helplessness, donors said.

Funds were set up by charities, organizations, schools, Web sites and even the New York Stock Exchange.

In Manhattan alone, the American Red Cross raised $400,000 in eight weeks.

Americans have repeated these simple lines countless times, but now, they carry a deeper meaning.

From coast to coast, the nation pulled together to show just how indivisible we are. Sports fans left their favorite team Jerseys at home and filled sports facilities with American threads.

Athletes put petty competitions on hold to honor the lives lost. Musicians and actors dropped their busy schedules to raise money for suffering and destruction. Strangers cried together. Enemies held hands.

DISTRICT LINES

Riley exist in such proximity, the cities are considered one community of interest.

With one proposed map, Lawrence (Douglas County) essentially would be in half, with the university and points east into the second district. Junction City would be in the first, and Fort Riley and Manhattan would stay in the second, Glasscock said.

"My preference is for all three to stay in the second," he said. "The primary problems are communities of interest, and it is, generally speaking, understood that we will do everything we can not to split communities of interest."

Legislators are supposed to draw new districting lines to reflect population shifts documented in the 2000 Census. There are four Kansas districts, which divide the population as reported in the decennial census to be used for voting districts.

Manhattan, Fort Riley and Junction City all are in the second district, where many legislators say they should stay. Redistricting guidelines specify that districts should attempt to recognize a community of interest when possible, as similar communities typically want the same congressman or woman to represent them.

"Junction City separating from represent them.

"Junction City separating from Fort Riley doesn't make sense," said Joey Bahr, legislative assistant for redistricting for the House Democratic caucus. "Fort Riley is the lifeblood of Junction City. You can't go into Junction City without noticing Fort Riley influence. If Fort Riley were to close tomorrow,
Junction City would take a big hit."

These proposed maps are legal, as each district contains a population of about 672,105, deviating by three or four positively or negatively. Still, the main problem is separating particular communities of interest.

"That is a legal map from the standpoint that it meets the requirements for the size of the districts population wise," Dave Kerr, president of the Senate, said. "There are many different ways you can draw the map. I think we could have a more logical map than that."

Rep. Jeff Peterson, R-Manhattan, wants Fort Riley to stay in the second district, he said, because Fort Leavenworth is in the north-eastern part of Kansas is presently in that same congressional district. Having two military bases in the same district allows Kansas to have a military representative, U.S. Rep. Jim Ryun, R-Kan., who serves as Vice-Chairman of the House Armed Services Personnel Subcommittee.

Charlie Hostetler, chairman of the Riley County Republican party, said he does not think splitting Lawrence would cause too many problems.

"In our proposal, the Republican proposal, put the city of Lawrence, put half of it in the third district and half in the second and keep the Riley County area in the second," he said. "My position is to divide up Lawrence. I don't think they are harmed by that."

Martha Gray, chair of Riley County Democratic party, said she disagrees with the Republican's plan. She said she wants to see Manhattan and function City stay in the same district, possibly going into the first district.

"According to the map, that would make more sense. We are jutted out from the second," she said. "We will be going into the first district in 10 years if we don't now. We can't possibly keep the numbers Hostetler said he disagrees with Gray and said she has no way of knowing what the population will be by the next census. Christy Vanover, public affairs director at Fort Riley, said she has not heard too many worries from those at the base about Fort Riley and Junction City being split. "I've heard concerns in the local community, but as far as Fort Riley is concerned, I haven't heard anything from the commanders in chief," she said. As far as K-State is concerned, Sue Peterson, director of government relations, said the university just follows whatever legislators decide.

"From our perspective, we feel we're represented by all four Congressmen," she said. "We have research all over the state, students from different parts of the state, so we kind of think we're represented by everyone in the state." In Sue Peterson's class, Kansas

Politics and Government, her students had to try to redraw district lines. Vy Bui, sophomore in accounting, finance and pre-law, is in Peterson's class and said she learned a lot about the stress legislators experience when dividing district lines equally. Her group came up with a plan to leave all counties within the same district, lunction City and Fort Riley together and Lawrence in the same district.

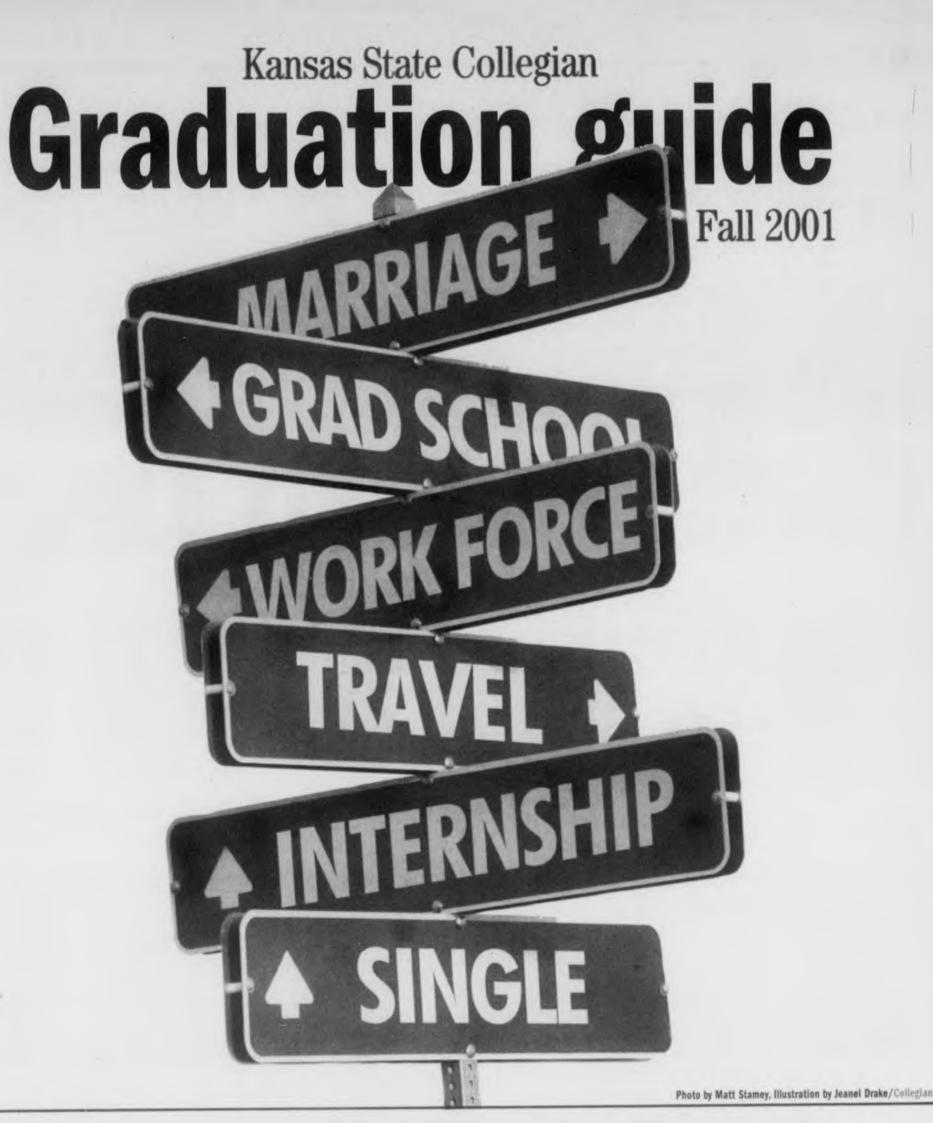

"It's kind of hard to have any suggestions, because every legislator has their own county that they're worried about, and their own things they have to follow, so it's kind of hard to say," Bui said.

Peterson said community members should voice their concerns and contact their representatives after looking at the different map proposals and deciding which plan suits their community and its interests best.

"We need feedback from members of the community to the members of the committee," he said.

"We need to hear back from people as far as which options they prefer."

Graduation ceremonies close college careers

BY KECIA N. SEYB

ore than 1,000 students will receive their diplomas Friday and Saturday for the fall 2001 graduation ceremonies.

"It's a happy time, just a time to focus on everything you've done while you've been here," said Frances Hunley, who will receive a bachelor's degree in marketing and international business. "I don't see the ceremony as being too painful."

About 1,057 students have applied for graduation, according to the registrar's office. In addition to the 1,000 who will receive bachelor's degrees, 170 will

Broadcast schedule

Most of the commencement ceremonies will be broadcast on K-State's low power television — channel 21 on TV sets using antenna reception — and on Cox Cable's channel 8 in Manhattan.

This is a broadcast schedule that could change. Starting times are approximate.

Tuesday, Dec. 11 — Graduate School, 1-2:30 p.m.; College of Human Ecology, 2:30-4 p.m.

Wednesday, Dec. 12 — College of Architecture, Planning and Design, 1-2:30 p.m.; College of Arts and Sciences, 2:30-4 p.m.

Thursday, Dec. 13 — College of Education, 1-2:30 p.m.; and College of Business Administration, 2:30-4 p.m. receive master's degrees, 70 will receive doctorates, 25 will receive associate degrees and about 18 distance education students will graduate. Thirty students will receive multiple degrees.

Hunley, who will be the student speaker for the College of Business Administration, said she hasn't done a lot to prepare for the ceremony itself besides informing her family and friends of the time and place.

"I'm just trying to enjoy my last week of school and not worry about finals right now," she said. 'I'll think about that after graduation. As far as the speech goes. I've run through it, so that on that day I'm not so nervous, but I haven't done a lot to prepare.

Being so busy during the school year and looking for jobs, especially, takes a lot of time away from enjoying it."

Most colleges have a student speaker as well as another speaker, such as the dean of the college, or someone well-known, such as Kent Glasscock, speaker of the House of Representatives, who also will speak for the College of Business Administration's ceremony.

The student speakers are nominated by a professor, Hunley said. Then, the student submits an outline of the speech, which goes to a committee that approves the topic. Hunley's speech focuses on issues following Sept. 11.

"Basically, it's just kind of a speech that talks about how the present events, how they're affecting us as graduates — the recession, Sept. 11, the fact that the economy is different than it used to be. At the same time, we need to be thankful anyways," she said. "We need to look back and appreciate the opportunity to be at school. I'm trying to be inspirational."

Terry King, dean of the College of Engineering, will be speaking at the college's commencement, which he said is important. He said, however, he is looking forward to the reception the college has beforehand for all the graduates' family and friends.

"It's the informal way we connect with our students and their families," he said. "The formal ceremony in itself doesn't afford much time to interact with each other."

Mike Higley, student body president of K-State-Salina, will speak at the College of Technology and Aviation's ceremony in Salina for the third year. He said the ceremony in the Kansas Highway Patrol Training Center auditorium sounds a little different from the ceremonies in Bramlage Coliseum.

"I compare it to a high school graduation," he said.
"It's a lot smaller, so you know everyone, which is good.
They will know 60 percent, even if they don't live on campus."

King said graduation is just a fun time and wants to make his speech brief, as the highlight of the ceremony should be on the students' getting their diplomas rather than his speech.

"It's always fun for me to see students graduate," he said

"These are people who are making the transition from college life to the larger world. They're at the point where they can go off on their own now and be a part of the endeavors of this country."

Money, K-State memorabilia popular gift selections for graduates

BY TREVOR BURGESS

Giving the perfect gift to a college graduate can be a nightmare, but most students agree there is one gift that always works.

Well, anyone would probably want to see themselves get money for graduation." Jeff Hammer, senior in agronomy, said.

Most seniors say money is a gift they would like to receive.

With bills and student loans to begin to pay off, money is the most obvious choice

Although he said his first choice is cash, Hammer also said he is sticking with the football team, wherever they end up.

"I also wouldn't mind an allexpense paid trip to K-State's bowl game," he said.

Kade Gile, senior in social science, said he is thinking about a job when it comes gradua-

"I would like a new suit so I can look nice at all those interviews," he said.

Both Varney's Book Store and the K-State Student Union Bookstore have been selling various graduation items.

Carolyn Rose, who works in merchandise at the bookstore, said they have been selling a lot of job-related gifts for graduation.

People are buying a lot of the pen and pencil combinations," she said. "Also, the acrylic and wooden desk sets have been popular.

Rose said certain calculators and paperweights have been selling as well.

Sarah Barron, a student employee at Varney's, said they sell a lot of alumni-related gifts.

"A lot of diploma frames go out during this period. A lot of parents buy them," she said. "Also, alumni license plate frames and alumni sweatshirts are bought.

Along with the alumni merchandise. Barron said there are a lot of fun gifts that people are buying.

We have a beer candle with a Wildcat on it," she said, "so that is a fun gift that everyone gets. We also sell a lot of household items because people are moving."

Hose said people also are buying a lot of small items and

"If the gift pack is for a guy, it will have maybe all car things, like the license plate or the flags," she said. "If it's for a girl, there are different types of jewelry items that people have been buying."

Hammer said the best gift he could receive wouldn't come from family or friends.

"A confirmation call that I have a job would be a pretty nice gift, also," Hammer said.

K-State laid out its preliminary plan to hike tuition rates Wednesday to the Kansas Board of Regents.

"K-State's academic programs are first-rate, well-known and highly respected, but K-State's funding is far helow reasonable norms," Provost James Coffman said.

"Without an immediate injection of new funds, K-State's current level of quality is at risk.

The plan includes a student-funded equipment and technology fee, a division between the costs of upper and lower level courses and a plan to make tuition at K-State-Salina equal to K-State's. The new rates will go into effect next semester.

Officials also want K-State's tuition to fall near the median of all land-grant colleges.

Last semester, K-State had drawn up two options to reach the median level. One plan would increase tuition by about 9.5 percent each year for the next five years. Another would increase it by 5.5 percent each year for the next five years with engineering and business students paying $10 more per credit hour. Upper level courses would cost $20 more than lower level courses because they often cost more to operate.

Officiais only discussed principles not numbers - at Wednesday's meeting. In April or May, officials will present their final rates.

"The principles are set. By and large, I feel like a lot of decisions have been made," Student Senate Chair Matt Wolters said. "Basically, it's just a job of running the numbers to see which will achieve those principles."

The reasons behind the tuition increase are continuous budget shortfalls and chronic underfunding, officials

K-State's goal is to become a Top 10 land-grant university in teaching, research and extension. The university can't achieve that with its current level of funding, officials said.

Faculty salaries and other operating expenses are the two sore spots in the university's budget. Faculty salaries are at 87 to 92 percent of K-State's peer universities, which include Oklahoma State University, Iowa State University, Colorado State University, Oregon State University and North Carolina State University.

As far as OOE, other operating expenditures, which includes telephone lines, heating and cooling, copying and anything else that keeps a university running, K-State is at about 60 percent of its peers. To bring OOE funds to the same level as faculty salaries, the university would need $18 million by Student Body President Kyle Barker said students understand the need to increase tuition.

"It increases the value of our degree," he said. "We want to have a degree that is worth what we are paying for."

However, keeping tuition low is still a priority, Barker said.

K-State originally proposed five different plans, including one that would triple tuition in the next five

To compensate for the increase, the university plans to set tuition-waver

Wiens was a student and member of the fraternity for one semester. He was killed in a car-motorcycle accident in Wichita.

traffic was to blame for the accident, and Runft said no other leads explaining the cause of the accident are being followed at this time.

Scott Tatro, president of Delta Sigma Phi, said the loss of Wiens would place a mental burden on the house. In the semester Wiens was at K-State, Tatro said he was a positive figure in the fraternity.

"Sean was special," he said. "He really made us realize how much the house took care of each other.

a member of the fraternity for three semesters. He died in a onevehicle accident at about 3:10 a.m. on Interstate 70, said John Eichkron, public spokesman for the Kansas Highway Patrol. Velasquez was the passenger in a 1998 Ford truck when the vehicle went into the median and flipped end-over-end. It rolled many times and came to a stop on the south side of the eastbound lane. Velasquez was not wearing Eichkron said Velasquez was thrown from the vehicle and died at the scene.

The truck's driver, Matthew Dunn, sophomore in computer science, was wearing his seat belt and was not fatally injured in the accident, said Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life. He was taken to St. Francis Health Center in Topeka. He is now recovering at home.

Tatro said the accident probably was caused by a lack of sleep. Velasquez and Dunn were traveling back from Kansas City. Both had attended the Insight.Com Bowl in Phoenix, and they were about 20 miles west of Topeka when the accident occurred. Tatro said Velasquez was a good athlete.

He was a contributing member to the house, and he helped plan fund-raising activities that the house still is implementing.

The fraternity members have learned a lot from the loss of their two brothers' unfortunate accidents, Tatro said.

They're coping pretty much as well as can be expected," he said. "We're taking a

A scaled-back search for two K-State students who have been missing since a December boating accident continues.

*It's not with the intensity you've heard about and seen," said Lt. Hank Nelson with the Riley County Police Department.

Kyle David Chapman, 18; Christopher Nathan Shipley, 18; and Timothy Michael Bennett, 19, all were reported missing Dec. 5 after they didn't return home from a sailing trip at Tuttle Creek Reservoir. Bennett's body was found Dec. 6

Intense searches of Tuttle Creek Reservoir have been conducted by boat, on foot and by air. Searches entailed sonar, video and robotic equipment to look below the lake's surface. Dive Rescue International of Fort Collins, Colo., and Dive Rescue of Lee Summit, Mo., also were called in to help search

However, nothing has turned up, and the two men have been presumed dead. According to a press release issued by Police do not suspect foul play.

Bennett was a freshman in environmental design from Kansas City, Mo. Chapman, freshman in computer science, and Shipley, freshman in animal science, were both from Olathe, Kan.

K-State plans to celebrate the lives of the three men with a university and studentoriented memorial service at 4 p.m. Feb. 8 at All Faiths Chapel. The families also plan to attend.

Fort Riley solider dies from asthma attack

A Fort Riley soldier died Jan. 5 after suffering an asthma attack during a field training exercise at the base.

Robert Webb, 24, was a food service sergeant in the 1st Battalion, 16th Infantry. Webb suffered the attack at approximately 1:30 a.m., Christie Vanover, deputy media relations officer, said.

He received emergency medical treatment and was taken to Irwin Army Community Hospital.

He was pronounced dead around 5 a.m. An autopsy was performed on the same day, but results from the autopsy are still not available, Vanover said.

Webb, a Durham, N.C. native, had been based at Fort Riley since January 1998. He had been in the Army since

Information about whether Webb had previously had any problems with asthma during training exercises was not available.

Grand jury charges alleged bomber as trained terrorist

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A federal grand jury on Wednesday charged alleged shoe bomber Richard Reid with being an al-Qaeda trained terrorist in an indictment Attorney General John Ashcroft hailed as fresh proof of the government's ability to prosecute terrorists.

The indictment alleges that Reid attempted to kill the passengers on American Airlines Flight 63 from Paris to Miami on Dec. 22.

Wednesday's indictment said Reid received training from al-Qaeda in Afghanistan.

In addition to attempted use of a weapon of mass destruction and attempted murder and attempted homicide, Reid was charged with placing an explosive device on an aircraft, interfering with a flight crew, using a destructive device during a crime of violence and attempted wrecking of a mass transportation vehicle.

He also was charged with attempted wrecking of a mass transportation vehicle, a new charge created by Congress in an antiterrorism bill passed in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks on New York and Washington.

Ashcroft said if convicted on the charges brought against him, Reid could be sentenced to five life terms in

Law school student kills 3, wounds 3 more in shooting

GRUNDY, Va. - A law school student upset about his grades went on a shooting spree Wednesday, killing three people and critically wounding three others before he was wrestled to the ground by students, officials said.

The victims included the dean of the Appalachian School of Law and a professor who were gunned down in their offices.

The third person slain was a student, said Ellen Qualls, a spokeswoman for Gov. Mark Warner.

"When I got there there were bodies laying everywhere," said Dr. Jack Briggs, who has a private practice a half-mile from the school in this tiny western Virginia community.

Briggs said he had treated the suspect in the past year. He described the gunman as a Nigerian in his early 40s who had flunked out last year and been allowed to return.

Dean L. Anthony Sutin and the professor were "executed" in their offices, Briggs said.

He said the gunman then went downstairs to common area and opened fire on a crowd of students. killing one and wounding three

Residence halls open to students; changes become abundant in rooms

19 BY JAMIE BARRETT

Auxansas State Collegior

Returning to the residence halls Tuesday afternoon was a day full of hammering and drilling for Sarah Ecker.

A newly rearranged room, complete with a new loft built to accommodate a TV, kept Ecker, freshman in public relations, and her father busy for most of the afternoon.

"We're taking our old loft out and putting in this new one so we can have a spot for a TV," Ecker said, "I have already sold my old loft, too. My dad's glad because he did not want to take it home."

Even though her room is getting a face lift, Ecker said adjusting back to life at Moore Hall after being home for winter break will not be hard for her.

"Being here is better than being at home," Ecker said. "Nothing really changes over break. It is really good to be back."

Ecker was one of about 3,600 students who moved back into the residence halls this week. With some halls having maintenance work done during break and others having minor renovations done, there were some changes for residents when they returned.

Eric Mabie, resident assistant at Moore Hall, said most students notice one particular change in the halls when they come back.

"The halls are clean again," he said.

Other changes exist for residents switching halls or floors at semester, or being a new student altogether.

"We just moved from the sixth floor to the third floor," Sara Worrell, sophomore in elementary education, said.

"At first we were really excited, but now we are kind of apprehensive about what it will be like here."

Worrell's roommate Sara Sartin, sophomore in open-option, said they decided to move to the third floor of Moore Hall because their Bible study group met there.

"We were friends anyway," Sartin

"We are nervous about living on a new floor, though."

Robyn Wahoff, resident assistant at West Hall, said making new residents feel welcome is essential.

"Asking the new person questions is important," Wahoff said. "It makes a person feel comfortable when you seem interested in where they are coming from."

Jennifer Foster, residence life coordinator at Ford Hall, said the residence halls provide a good opportunity for students to meet new people.

"In a hall of over 200 people, there is always an opportunity to meet people," Foster said.

"Halls provide a bond for students and get them connected to other students who may be in their classes as well."

Foster said Ford Hall, like other residence halls, does have some students who move out at semester because of other living opportunities.

"Students have to find out what is right for them," she said. In order to find out what was

K-State to propose $40 million food safety facility to Legislature today on campus

BY SARAH BAHARI Kansas State Collegian

K-State will propose a longawaited $40 million food safety lab to the entire Kansas Legislature today — on campus.

Today most likely marks the Legislature's first meeting outside the Statehouse in Topeka.

"We're pleased that they think enough of the presentation that they're willing to come here and listen," said Sue Peterson, assistant to the university president.

Members of the Legislature toured K-State several months ago and were impressed with the facilities, Peterson said. They encouraged the entire Legislature to pay a visit this session.

The food safety lab is part of a larger proposal that includes a life sciences research center at the University of Kansas Medical Center and a commercial aircraft building and testing facility at Wichita State University. The proposal amounts to about $100 million.

But with a $426-million hole in the state budget, it is uncertain whether the Legislature will fund the three facilities.

"I don't know," Ron Trewyn, vice provost of research, said.

"It's hard to predict at this point."
K-State's facility would include laboratories for studying Level 3 pathogens, just a step below the most dangerous, like Ebola, which falls into Level 4.

It also would include the nation's first contained slaughter facility for research into dangerous food production pathogens that could infect plants and animals.

K-State initially proposed an $80-million facility in 1999, but scaled it down after unsuccessfully searching for funds.

Today's meetings will begin at 10:15 a.m. at Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union. Public seating will be available in the balcony.

The session will be broadcast live on Cox Cable channel 8 and on the Web at dce.ksu.edu/ksleg. Manhattan's KMAN-AM 1350 also will broadcast K-State's presentation from 11 to 11:45 a.m.

James Marsden, professor of animal sciences, and Jan Leach, professor of plant pathology, will be on hand to answer questions from the legislators.

Marsden said he expects to field questions about the need for such a facility.

"We want to stress the importance of maintaining the food safety capabilities we have here," he said. "Nothing is more important in Kansas than our food economy." The recent anthrax attacks drive home what K-State officials have been saying for the last three years, Trewyn said.

"We need additional capabilities if we're going to be prepared for emerging threats," he said.

K-State has made advances in the food safety field, Marsden said, but more can be done.

"What has happened is that Kansas State University has become a center of excellence in food safety research," he said. "We're doing a lot of great things with the facilities we have, but we're limited."

Tuition must increase. The university cannot continue to operate with so little

If it does, a K-State degree will carry zero integrity because of a lack of funding for professors salaries, university improvements and technology upgrades.

But there is a right way and a wrong way to acquire more money. If university officials take the wrong approach, it will hurt the people they intended to help the students.

One harmful idea is increasing the tuition at K-State-Salina. Salina students already face expensive flying classes, but do not enjoy luxuries like the Landon Lecture Series and other Manhattan campus events.

Another poor proposal is charging

To KSU Students:

On behalf of our entire football program: Players, coaches and support staff, I want to express our gratitude for the tremendous loyal support you have provided throughout the year (and years past). Though we did not meet the expectations of most (including ourselves), you stood firmly behind your team and classmates. That meant a great deal to these young men. We thank you. I am confident that everyone in this program will be committed to the hard work that is needed to improve upon the performance this past

The bandwagon effect

Americans easily caught up with latest trends, popular thoughts

Purple became fashionable again and tailgating now is a Saturday ritual

My younger brother

for hundreds of Kansans.

The American flag has become quite popular these days.

I'm not saying it wasn't popular before. It just seems to me there are a lot more people displaying red, white and blue than ever

I can't put my finger on it. but the surge of Americans touting the stars and stripes could stem from Sept. 11. There's something trendy about flying the flag all of a sudden, and it really gets me.

The Bandwagon Effect, as I like to call it, is everywhere. From fad diets to the entire decade of the '80s, everyone has seen the horses' hooves creeping closer and closer, feeling the need to climb aboard before being run over.

When do people decide something is important enough to support? Does there need to be some drastic event or big win to take place before people start showing their support?

Take the K-State women's basketball team for example. There were almost twice as many fans at their game Jan. 12 than at the men's game. Where were these people before they were ranked?

All of a sudden, our women's team starts smashing their opponents into the ground like cigarette butts and everyone and their dog is cheering them on. My kudos to the one or two thousand true fans who go to the games, regardless of the outcome.

But then why don't those fans equally care about the men's team? If they're true fans of the game, they would go no matter how the team is doing.

Our football team is a prime example of the Bandwagon Effect. One year we're struggling to keep the program alive, and the next we're fighting for control of the Big 12 with an expanded stadium and standing-room only in ICAT.

with the war America is participating in to rid the world of terrorists. Why don't we all paint our houses red. false sense of patriotism

After all, that's what riding on the bandwagon is all about: being fickle. Many of us already have hopped on board. Now, I do have to acknowledge the fact that we were doing pretty well as a nation before Sept. 11. The economy still was in good shape and Americans were trying to forget about Gary Condit and Chandra Levy. There really was no need to flaunt our patriotism.

Then came the attacks. All of a sudden, the American flag could be seen on every vehicle, house, yard and piece of clothing imaginable. I guess something is only worth supporting when all hell breaks loose.

It shouldn't be that way. If we are going to be such ardent patriots when we're at war, we should show that same enthusiasm during times of peace. We shouldn't always need a Sept. 11 to remind us how important our country and freedom

Presidential conflicts quietly buried beneath recent war coverage

Look beyond the makeover.

Distance yourself from the hype and illusion of the current George W. Bush propaganda media blitz, and you come across multiple conflicts tration. I'm sick of the post 9-11 makeover the public relations industry has given to Bush, whose real goals are based on foreign oil and re-election, not elimination of terror.

I love seeing his image improve as he reads someone else's words and agendas on those 3 x 5 note cards and teleprompters.

The long, dramatic pauses where he silently thanks God that he didn't have to write any of it are especially amusing.

An in-depth look at who makes up the current administration reveals who they are aligned with. We had conflicts a year ago when he was sworn into office, and the war on terror has only multiplied

Huge conflicts of interest exist between the Bush administration's stated goals and its relationship with the defense industry, as well as the energy industry.

Days after Bush announced his candidacy, the energy lobby was quick to start building up his war chest. Within months, businesses like Enron donated $1.8 million, with Exxon coming in a close second at $1.2 million.

George Dubya spent more on his 2000 campaign getting elected than any other president in American history.

You didn't really think they would invest so much and expect nothing in return? The majority of Americans feel they can contemplate the entirety of what's going on simply by watching the bare minimum of corporate-owned national media.

However, a look at foreign publications. like the BBC, London's "Guardian," and Arabnews.com, to name a few, paint a completely different picture of current world events.

Paul White

To let you know what kind of politics the current administration is playing, let's focus first on former President George H.W. Bush.

In 1973, he was Chairman of the Republican National Committee and close friend of Richard Nixon at the time the Watergate story broke.

Six men; some connected to the CIA, were caught breaking into the Democratic National Committees headquarters to bug their phones. He defended the president until the Nixon tapes broke.

Big Bush's morality also comes into question in light of a number of memos from J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI that surfaced in "The Nation" (a political journal) during Bush's 1988 campaign.

These memos, dated November 1963 mentioned a George Bush working on behalf of the CIA in Florida, collecting intelligence on the Cuban response to the JFK assassination.

The story also quotes ex-CIA who claim that Bush was an active operative throughout the 1960s in the "Caribbean.

In 1976, when he was appointed director of the CIA, he claimed to have never worked for any intelligence agency. Possibly an impeachable offense of

Bush Sr. then spent a year trying to clean up the agency's unfavorable image throughout Church Commission hearings. A hard task at hand considering the agency had been linked to assassinations, economic sabotage, rigging elections, and various wrongdoings in Guatemala, Chile, Congo, Cuba and Vietnam. Bush Sr.'s presence at the National Security Council meetings that brought us the Iran-Contra scandal was confirmed early on by statements from Ronald Reagan, though he claimed to be "out of the White House logs showed just how in the loop Bush really was. This is a legitimate impeachable offense where quite a few members of the administration decided to sell weapons to Iran, our enemy at the time, as well as allow cocaine to be trafficked into the United States to fund a covert war in South America that Congress specifically told them not to

Then they lied about all of it while under congressional oath.

And best of all, shortly before seven men were set to testify about Bush's involvement, he pardoned them quietly in the final hours of his administration.

And that brings us to the present. Although invisible from the camera's eye, and buried in mass print media, Bush Sr. is working as a consultant to Saudi Arabia with the Carlyle Group, the 11th largest defense contractor in the United It is here that Bush, along with former Secretary of State James Baker, former Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci, and former Prime Minister of Britain John Major, among other prominent names, contribute to this $12 billion D.C.-based private equity firm.

Carlucci and current Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld are old college friends and both were on the same wrestling team in college.

Pretty convenient for a defense contractor and the man who decides how defense budget dollars are

I suppose this might explain Bush's memo to the FBI that warned them to back off the bin Laden family money trail.

When Osama bin Laden, who the media and the government have manufactured into the new source of evil for us to misdirect our hatred unto, blew up U.S. embassies overseas, who was contracted to rebuild them? It was the bin Laden family's construction business

The New York Times, Washington Post and Judicial Watch all expressed concerns of a conflict of interest, with this in mind, in the months following Bush's coup, I mean inauguration.

The fact that criticism is muted during these times of crisis, or deemed un-American, prevents us from fully understanding the entirety of the consequences of Bush's conflicts of interest.

91.9 studio construction ahead of schedule in Student Union

BY EDIE HALL

Konsus State Collegian

Work on the new KSDB-FM 91.9 studio in the K-State Student Union is ahead of schedule, campus officials said.

After two years of discussion, the project to move the studio from McCain Auditorium to the Union began Dec. 17 and continued during winter break. The studio is expected to be finished in mid-February, according to Bernard Pitts, executive director of the Candace Walton, KSDB-FM station manager, said 91.9 employees have been wanting to get into the Union for the past 30

"It was just wishful thinking," Walton said. "In the last four years, it became a dream, and in the last two years, we've made it more of a reality.'

To make this transition from dream to reality, KSDB-FM was allocated $64,178 by Student Senate for the move and new equipment. Walton said this was about 50 percent of what they needed. The A.O. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications is paying for the other half of that cost and also is funding all of the actual construction work being done.

Todd Simon, director of the school of journalsim, said although he didn't see this as a long-term plan to get the KSDB-FM studio into the Union, he did believe a change needed to be made.

"It just sounded really appealing to me," Simon said.

Walton said she thought the move would allow students to have better access to the studio and the extra attention will be good for the growth of future staff members.

Walton said all of the equipment that goes in the studio will be new. She plans on new CD players, audio consuls, fiber-optic connections and new computers.

She also said the 91.9 staff is beginning to get excited about the move.

"So far they've had kind of an, 'I'll believe it when I see it, attitude." Walton said. "But now that they see the construction, they are starting to get pumped."

Pitts said he thinks the project will be a win-win situation.

"Both sides will benefit," Pitts said. "The station will get more exposure being at the Union, and they can also help us market various services and programs such as site counseling, UPC programming and grand openings.

CRUSHED

Weak defense, turnovers result in Wildcat defeat

BY DAN SMITH

Kansus State Collegian

PHOENIX - In the end, not even extra practice time was enough to remedy K-State's most glaring deficiencies.

K-State turned the ball over four times on offense and couldn't find the answer for Syracuse tailback James Mungro on defense, as the Orangemen (10-3) outmuscled and outhustled K-State (6-6) on their way to a 26-3 rout of the Cats on Mungro, the offensive player of the game, led all rushers with 112 yards on 19 carries and the Syracuse offense capitalized on nearly every extra opportunity to hand K-State its first non-winning season since 1992.

"We just didn't prepare and didn't play as well as we should have, and I didn't coach as well as I needed to from the outset. That has a lot to do with it," Coach Bill Snyder said.

Preparation and coaching aside, though, the Orangemen hit the ground running from the early stages and never

After trading field position with K-State for the game's first 10 minutes, Syracuse got its first big break at the 5:38 mark in the first quarter.

On second-and-10 from the Orangemen 35, Mungro took an option pitch from Syracuse quarterback R.J. Anderson and tiptoed down the left sideline for a 65-yard touchdown scamper.

Despite Snyder's protests that Mungro stepped out at the 50, the play stood the first of several disappointments for the Cat defense on the day.

"It's frustrating," senior linebacker Ben Leber said.

"Our biggest goal is not to give up big plays, and we did that, and they capitalized on them. So hats off to them.'

It wouldn't be the last time K-State heard from Mungro and the Syracuse

After a Joe Rheem field goal brought the Cats within four points of the Orangemen with 4:03 to play in the first quarter - the only points the purple would score all day - K-State began to self-destruct on offense. Punter Mike Ronsick's fumbled snap at the Wildcats' four and a Marc Dunn inter-final game in Phoenix, including several starters. Read how senior safety Ion McGraw reacted to the loss and how the quarterback situation will be solved in the offseason, all part of the Collegian's extended coverage available only at ception on K-State's next possession set up two one-yard touchdown runs from Mungro to push the lead to 16 heading into halftime.

The Wildcats' troubles continued in the second half. The Syracuse defense forced punts on four of K-State's seven possessions in the half - a fumble, interception and a turnover on downs capped the other

They definitely put in an excellent gameplan. We tried to run, and they stacked the box, and we tried to pass, and they ended up backing up into a zone coverage," senior wideout Aaron Lockett

"I think we found ourselves struggling a little more than we wanted to on third down, and we ended up getting in secondand third-and-longs."

K-State's offense would find itself in tough situations more often than not. converting on just four of 18 third downs.

"We were in a position where we had to pass the ball, and they dropped four or five guys, and we made a couple turnovers, and they definitely capitalized on the turnovers that we made. And that was the difference," Lockett said.

Ell Roberson got the start and struggled early, and Dunn did little more to be successful against the Syracuse defense. The two Cat quarterbacks combined for 221 yards and two interceptions on 14-of-40 passing, after being hurried on nearly every attempt and sacked five times

K-State's normally reliable running game sputtered as well. Josh Scobey, who averaged nearly 115 yards per game coming into the contest, was held to 46 yards on 10 carries, and Roberson gained nine yards on the ground.

"We just couldn't execute," Snyder said. 'We had the opportunity, and we didn't get it done."

QB situation still unsolved after bowl game

BY DEREK BOSS

PHOENIX - The question still lingers. K-State's quarterback controversy never answered itself this season. In fact, 11 games and nearly four months after the Wildcats' narrow win over USC to open the year. the team seems no closer to finding its answer at QB. The purple's 26-3 loss to Syracuse in the Insight.com Bowl on Dec. 29 might have even heightened those concerns.

Against the Orangemen, Coach Bill Snyder found himself shuffling Ell Roberson and Marc Dunn in and out of the lineup. trying to find a spark to light his offense.

"It's kind of like slot machines, I guess," Snyder said. "You play one for a while and nothing happens. Maybe you move on to the next one. We had to try to make a change.

"We could go ahead and keep beating our heads against the wall, but that doesn't make a whole lot of sense to me. It was important to us to try to find the right mix."

The Cats never did.

Under its starter, Roberson, K-State went 0-for-8 on third-down conversions in the first half. Throw out a 47-yard strike to senior Aaron Lockett that set up a field goal, and the sophomore was a dismal 0-for-10 passing at the break.

Netting just three points in the first five offensive drives of the game, Snyder replaced Roberson with Dunn, but the junior threw an interception on a deep post route to Lockett on his first play from scrimmage.

"It was obvious I tried to come in and make too big of a play in too big of a hurry, and that happened," Dunn said.

So, the reigns were handed back to Roberson.

A turnover-on-downs and two more unsuccessful drives later, though, Dunn would get another crack at it with 0:37 to play in the half. But even when the Cat QB started to click - completing three consecutive passes for 56 yards - freshman placekicker Joe Rheem missed a 41-yard field goal as time expired.

It was that kind of day for the offense, Dunn's brief offensive success, however. did start to carry over into the second half. The junior led K-State to the Syracuse 30 before Roberson re-entered the game, only to lose a fumble on the next play as he ran right on the quarterback option.

From there, neither QB could drive the Cats past the Orangemen 48 yard-line the rest of the game.

The duo finished a combined 14-of-40 passing with two interceptions. Of that, Roberson completed just 2-of-15.

"You look forward to those guys performing so well," tailback Josh Scobey said, "and some of the things that happened today, you look back and say, 'Wow, how could those things happen?" It just didn't work out how we wanted to today." Syracuse linebacker Clifton Smith, who won defensive MVP honors with 12 tackles, two sacks and a forced fumble, said the Orangemen defense had the Cats figured out, no matter who they had at QB. They knew K-State, who boasted the fifth best rushing offense in the nation coming in, was primarily a ground threat.

"Basically, we just knew that either quarterback that was in, they were still a running team." Smith said. "So we just played the same way - very aggressive against both quarterbacks."

But Roberson said he still couldn't believe the way the offense struggled after a month's worth of work following the Missouri win.

"It was rough because I felt that we prepared well for this game as an offensive unit," Roberson said. "From a quarterback's standpoint, I felt that the chemistry wasn't there, and it's something that we've just got

"I feel it's more of a technique factor for me. This summer. I have to watch film of myself, see what I'm doing wrong and just try to perfect it. I've got a whole summer to work on it."

Twenty-one points, 12 rebounds, five steals, three assists and two blocks.

So went freshman Kendra Wecker's line following K-State's 85-71 win over visiting Nebraska on Jan. 12 at Bramlage Coliseum.

The double-double was her sixth of the season and helped to extend the Cats' winning streak to 13 games, a streak dating back to Nov. 26.

A Bramlage Coliseum record of 13,466 fans showed up to support the then No.14 Wildcats as K-State ended a five-game losing streak against the Huskers. It was a day set aside to celebrate Wecker's decision to play college basketball as a Wildcat.

"Coming out and working has been great. There has never been a day where I went in to practice with a bad attitude. It has been great all along, and it just feels unbelievable to be a part of a season like we are having."

Coach Deb Patterson said Wecker's contributions definitely are a factor in the Wildcats' progress to date.

Kendra's contributions to the team, particularly her ability to rebound effectively, have been invaluable. The freshman leads the Wildcats, pulling down an average of 8.3 boards per game.

"It was expected that Kendra Wecker would bring great intensity and athleticism to the floor," Patterson said. "That has been revealed in her ability to make us a better rebounding club.

"I really begin and end with her ability to attack. She really gives us a different personality on the boards - she gives us a presence.

Though impressive, Patterson said Wecker's ability on the boards is not where the contributions cease. Wecker also is K-State's third leading scorer at nearly 17 points per contest, a legitimate threat from both the post and perimeter.

"Kendra's game will continue to expand,"

Patterson said. "She brings us versatility because of her ability to score on the perimeter, as well as with her back to the Wecker's parents, Randy and Pam, who were both in attendance as K-State honored their daughter, said witnessing Kendra's expanding game has been a source of pride, and a humbling experience.

Wecker holds 10 individual records at Marysville High School, but one she couldn't top was the single season rebounding average, a record belonging to her mother. Pam said Kendra's experience with the team has been exciting.

"It's awesome," she said. "It is neat she can be close to home and have her fans come out to support her and the lady Cats."

Wecker's father said Kendra's road to Manhattan, and her achievements with the Wildcats so far, bas certainly been special.

Success of women's basketball program comes as no surprise

I probably shouldn't say I told you so, but... your tongue by the end of the school year."

The day was Nov. 19, and along with a handful of women's basketball fans in Manhattan, I was getting geared up for the Cats' game against IUPUI. K-State was coming off its first win over Georgia Tech three days prior, and the roots for a great story were taking hold. In my column that day. I wrote the following:

"You might have not even known that K-State has a women's basketball team. But by the end of this season, you will.

More than that, I'm willing to bet that names such as Megan Mahoney, Kendra Wecker and Laurie Koehn will be on the tip of A total of 2,419 fans made it out to Bramlage that night, a few less than expected. Now, I'm not claiming to be a prophet.

Nor am I going to say I saw this coming.

In fact, I'll be the first to tell you I was dead wrong. Truth be told, it didn't take this talented group of women until season's end to turn heads on campus. Heck, they didn't even need 15 games to make their impression.

Dan Smith

And now everyone is taking note. At 17-1 and 5-0 in the conference, Coach Patterson's pack is attracting a lot of attention. Even ESPN is starting to notice. On its women's basketball link, the headline 'A-O-K-State' and a photo of Laurie Koehn greeted all women's basketball fans early this week, and the network named the Cats the 'most emerging team of the first half of the season. It's a well-deserved title, too, after K-State earned two upset wins over then-No. 4 lowa State in Ames and No. 8 Baylor to kick off the conference schedule. Three days after the Cats disposed of No. 21 Colorado on Jan. 9, a record 13,466 fans turned out Jan. 12 to snap Nebraska's fivegame winning streak over K-State at Bramlage. Thousands more listened to the game on the radio. (They would have been in the stadium. but the game was sold out.)

It was then that Patterson knew her team had risen to a new, different level.

"When the warm-ups were going on, the introductions and just before the start of the game, I looked at our arena, and I thought There is not a place anywhere in women's basketball any better than what this crowd is," Patterson said.

"Not at Connecticut, not at Tennessee, not at Iowa State, not at Southwest Missouri."

When the latest poll was released on Monday, K-State was ranked No. 9 in the Associated Press poll, just three spots shy of the highest ranking ever for a women's team.

The last time the Cats were ranked in the top 10 was March 11, 1984. I was 4 and probably still drooling.

Now it's our turn to drool together. Not for a struggling, mediocre football team. Not for a men's team that has succumbed to internal bickering and underachievement. On the contrary, this year will be remembered for the women's team that brought back basketball magic to Manhattan.

The Cats' toughest challenge is yet to come, though. Sustaining early-season success has never been easy for any team, and it won't be any easier for this young group.

Wecker, Koehn and company now will have to deal with the pressure of a possible conference title and NCAA Tournament berth in the season's stretch run.

But then again, pressure seems to be what this young group thrives on.

home. Now, the Cats have risen to No. 9 and were featured on the front of ESPN's women's basketball page.

"I don't think we could have really anticipated that they would have the kind of start they have had in the league," Patterson said. "It's a great league, and the challenge every night is such a great challenge. We expect to be competitive in this league, but we don't necessarily expect to run the table." The mere fact that K-State can contemplate not losing another game shows how far the team has come since winning just two conference games last season.

The biggest change has been the addition of freshmen Koehn, Megan Mahoney and Kendra Wecker, who together average 48 points a game. Koehn also leads the nation in three-point shots made. Koehn and Wecker have earned Big 12 Rookie of the Week honors four times. Last year's Big 12 Freshman of the Year, Nicole Ohlde, has benefited from the presence of other big scorers and averaged 18 points and eight rebounds per game. Senior Kristin Rethman has added seven points per game.

Despite having four players averaging double-digit scoring, no egos have emerged to hurt the team's chemistry, Patterson said.

"In a way, it's easy because these are very unselfish players," Patterson said. "They've got a good feel for one another. It doesn't make things automatic, but it certainly makes it fun to be out there on the floor with players you've got a feel for and players that are unselfish."

The team also has played with enough enthusiasm to keep crowds cheering in the stands even after the final buzzer. In one quintessential moment after the Baylor victory, Mahoney jumped up on press row and pumped her fist while freshman Brie Madden danced in the corner and the other players combined in a hugging, jumping mass at midcourt.

For Patterson, the celebration was just part of a fantastic season for her team.

"We love enjoying the moment and relishing the good things that are happening," she said.

"What's really neat about this basketball team is while we've had a blast the evening of the victory, we've come in to the gym after every single game ready to line it up and be focused at practice the next day, and that's all you can ask of a basketball team."

Senate to review social service eligibility

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A Senate committee plans to review eligibility rules for social services because two Republican leaders want to look for potential cost savings.

Gov. Bill Graves and many legislators believe the state must add nearly $120 million to cover unanticipated costs in services for the poor, elderly and disabled.

The extra expenses are part of a projected $426 million gap between expected revenues and spending commitments for the state's 2003 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

On Wednesday, officials of the departments of Aging and Social and Rehabilitation Services briefed the Senate Ways and Means Committee about the cost increases.

Beach Museum receives grant for children's literacy program

BY LINDSAY FETTERMAN

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art received a $50,000 grant from MetLife to help create new children's literacy programs in Manhattan.

The grant will help fund the production of literacy crates that will be a continuation of the "Beyond Oz: Children's Book Illustrations From the Region" exhibition running from July to December. The crates include books and other activities for children.

The "Beyond Oz" exhibition will feature family programming in the summer and school tours in the fall.

Local artists will give public talks to families at the museum in the summer and visit schools to talk to children in the fall.

The literacy crates will be based upon this exhibition. Each set will include a crate for early, beginning, intermediate and advanced readers. It will give teachers the ability to work with a wide variety of reading levels.

Books, art project ideas, puppets and music will be included in each of the crates. Crates will be distributed to the eight elementary schools in Manhattan and surrounding areas. The crates also will be available to check out at the K-State's Community Service Program and the museum.

"The crates will help in the development of readers, help kids to love books and develop literary skills," said Katherine Schlageck, museum education and public service supervisor.

They also will allow the exhibition to live on for several years and be an excellent new resource for teachers around the area, she said.

While the crates will not be ready until next year, there will be extensive testing until then to figure out what

The ongoing testing period is a new volunteer opportunity for K-State students. Although all students would benefit, Schlageck said, students majoring in elementary education, art education and early childhood and family studies will find it especially useful because they will work directly with children to find the books they like and dislike.

"You lose guys to unexpected circumstances, so you just try to pick up where you left off."

A memorial service for the two students has not been planned, but Tatro said the fraternity is considering a service of some kind within the next few weeks. Jones said the recent death of a K-State freshman in a sailing accident at Tuttle Creek Reservoir, and the presumed death of two other freshmen students involved in the accident, is a similar situation. The death of a former and current member of the fraternity compounds the grief felt by those who knew them, he said.

All three lived in the Marlatt residence hall. A series of deaths, he said, can rattle students. "I can't make a blanket statement for everyone that lives in that house, but it's probably an exponential effect," he said.

Since the start of the academic year, there have been seven student deaths. Four of these were due to vehicle accidents and the other three from the sailboat accident. Jones said

Wiens' death is not officially considered a student death given that he was not enrolled at K-State at the time.

The number of student deaths. Jones said, for the previous calendar year was 15. This is the highest number of K-State deaths in the past five years. Jones said vehicle accidents claimed the lives of half the students.

Jones said a high amount of student-travelers contributes to tragic accidents.

"We have many travelers - by virtue of their activity, they encounter risk, and sometimes that risk claims them," he said.

He said he sees the initial and long-term effects of student death as it moves through campus.

"I can say that each time a student dies - you drop a pebble in a pond - there are so many people that are affected by it as the ripple goes out," he said.

The University of Kansas, Wichita State, Pittsburg State, Emporia State and Fort Hays

State universities also made tuition presentations Wednesday.

More than 20 KU students attended the meeting to protest the lack of involvement students had.

KU Student Body President Justin Mills said officials did an embarrassing job of gathering student input.

Barker said K-State students had several opportunities to voice their opinions at university-sponsored meetings.

"When I had the opportunity to have conversations with other student leaders, I realized how lucky we were throughout our process," he said.

BirdHouse Blues

Blues musician opens birdHouse season

Kansas State Collegian

To truly understand the blues. you just have to be there.

Guy Davis, the blues musician appearing as part of the Birdhouse concert series this weekend, said the live performance is a crucial element of the music because it brings to life an art form more than 70years old.

"A performance brings the music to life," he said. "It tells the story of the music.

Davis, who has been playing the blues since he grew up in New York City in the 1960s, said telling a story through music can disarm a tense

"I want folks to relax and be a part of the performance," he said. This isn't a music that you have to be quiet for when you hear it. It's music to tap your foot to and get

David Kamerer, BirdHouse director, said Davis was chosen for his powerful presence and the diversity his blues brings to the series.

Davis' background in theater might be what helps him to capture Tuning in Guy Davis will perform at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Arts Center as part of the BirdHouse concert. senes. Tickets are $12 for students, $15 for the general public, and are lable at the Manhattan Arts Center, Claffin Books and the Dusty Bookshelf.

the attention of his audience so thoroughly. Karnerer said.

"He's the total package," Kamerer said. "He can sing and he's got a background in theater ... That makes him very charismatic."

Davis will be performing his own music backed only by his acoustic guitar, and Kamerer said the style the singer will bring is different from many BirdHouse shows.

"African-American music has brought so much to our culture but has been somewhat neglected. particularly the early music," Kamerer said. "We want to show the richness of the different streams that influence songwriters."

That richness is what Davis said people have to experience firsthand. Davis said that while recordings have been a great way of spreading an appreciation for blues music, actually being in the presence of the musician is what the blues is all about.

Recordings give listeners an idea of what the music was meant to sound like, but it still is removed from the actual artist.

"When the audience can no longer see the twinkle in your eye then something has changed, and the blues aren't the blues any more,"

Giving the audience a show they can enjoy is a way of reaching them so they understand that concept,he said.. Through his songs, he tries to make them feel the personal feeling that is so important to his music.

"The blues is pure when you play in someone's kitchen, when you can be personal and informal with your audience," he said.

Steve Martini, BirdHouse coordinator, said Davis' blues are a great way to start such a diverse slate of musicians for the 2002 season. This year, coordinators are focusing on presenting a good mix of acts, he said.

"It's the most eclectic and diverse schedule we've put

Besides Davis' performance, other styles new to the series are brought in as well. The Samite trio is popular for their African-influence music, and they will be appearing in March. The Tom Prasada-Rao trio mixes different world musics, along with pop influences for another sound new to BirdHouse.

Kamerer said he doesn't want to see BirdHouse become stale by having the same style of artists appear every season.

"We want to present a wider range of songwriters," he said. "Often times when you think of a songwriter, you picture someone onstage by themself with an acoustic guitar playing folk rock."

Kamerer said Davis puts a twist on this conventional image.

"It's raw, rough, in-your-face blues, but he's also a great songwriter."

With the smaller listening space at the Manhattan Arts Center, Davis said he is looking forward to the intimate experience it offers.

"I like to see the reaction of the crowd and what they get from the

Welcome Back Day offers fun activities for students

Carises State Collegian

A steady stream of students filled the K-State Student Union Courtyard on Wednesday at the third annual Welcome Back Day, sponsored by the Union Program Council.

"It doesn't even seem like I'm working," Jason Baldridge, adventure programs committee chairman, said. 'It feels more like I'm playing.'

UPC volunteers were on hand to walk students through the process of tie-dyeing T-shirts and decorating coffee mugs. Flavored ice was also available.

"This is the first year we've had snow cones," said Tyler Adams, UPC president. "Each year we keep adding new activities, but my favorite is the tie-dye T-shirt booth. It's just something different and it's going to become a spring tradition."

Students also received free gift bags, including event and film calendars promoting future UPC events.

"A lot of students don't know we exist," said Baldridge. "We're trying to get our name out there."

Adams said UPC sponsors several events students might not know about including films, comedians and lectures.

"We also sponsor events like the Festival of Nations and Lunchtime Lounge," he said.

Gina Kimble, program adviser, said the purpose of Welcome Back Day was to find out if UPC was meeting students' needs. In order to participate, students had to fill out a survey and answer questions about different activities that interest them.

"The survey is just one way we can cater our activities to what the students really want," Kimble said.

Claire Mohlman, daytime programs committee chair, said the survey helps UPC plan future events.

"The survey is our biggest programming tool. We also get ideas from conferences and other universities, but the survey is what helps us the most," she said.

Mohlman said the events are a great way to get students interested in campus activities.

"The hands-on activities really get students involved," she said. "Students get excited about what they're doing, and they have something to take home when they're finished."

Mohlman also said she enjoys these events because they give her a chance to interact with the people who stop by.

"I like college students. They're really fun to be around," she said.

Jacee Cantrell, senior in family life and community services, said the event was a great place to see friends she hadn't seen during break.

"I was done with my intersession classes and thought this was a fun idea," she said. "Plus, I've run into several people I haven't seen in a while.'

Darla Emery, freshman in elementary education, said the event gave her something different to do.

"This makes me feel more involved with my school," she said.

Shape-up your new year with exercise at the Rec

Looking for a way to get rid of all of those pounds gained during the holidays? Or does a New Year's resolution include getting back into shape? If any of these apply, come to the Rec Complex and the Natatorium for Wildcat Workouts and Wildcat Waterworks. These exercise sessions are a great way to have fun and get back into shape. Wildcat Workouts provide a great variety to fit anyone's needs. Each exercise session is designed to work specific parts of the body. Some of the exercise sessions include: Advanced, Aero, Basic and Intermediate Step. These sessions supplement each other with toning and basic step choreography. Cardio Intervals, Cardio Kick and Kickbox Combo are great interval sessions that are total body workouts. Fit Flex, Hi/Lo, Step and Tone, Step Intervals, and Abs & Back contain strength training, high & low impact floor workouts, and toning to improve relieve stress, and become stronger both physically and mentally. Recreational Services also offers Wildcat Waterworks at the Natatorium. These sessions include Deep Water Jogging and Aqua Aerobics. Deep Water jogging combines water buoyancy and resistance for zero impact. Aqua Aerobics is a great workout using water resistance while decreasing the impact on all joints and the spine. Aerobic sessions are a great way to look and feel better, tone muscles and to improve cardiovascular fitness. All fitness sessions are offered at varying times seven days a week ranging from 6:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. All sessions are open to Kansas State University students and facility use cardholders.

My Favorite Workout

When Derek Ackerman, from Westmoreland, Kansas, comes to the Rec, he is getting ready for Officer Candidate School (OCS), which is boot camp for officers. Ackerman just graduated with a degree in Mechanical Engineering. He is leaving in January and wants to be in great shape. Ackerman likes coming to the Rec to get things done in a short amount of time. He usually comes to the Rec with his wife or with his friends. Since he is leaving for boot camp, Ackerman does many exercises to keep himself in top shape. "I usually run and do sit-ups and push-ups," Ackerman said. "I used to lift weights, but I stopped and never started up again." Ackerman's favorite exercise would have to be running. But, he also enjoys working out on the Stairmaster. The music and TV's that the Rec provides gives Ackerman a great atmosphere to work out in. Ackerman has been coming to the Rec for 4 years and has some advice for other Rec goers. "Get in a routine and keep at it," Ackerman said. "Stay in the routine instead of going just once a month."

Who's Who at the Rec

Bobbi Dunn, a sophomore in Nutrition and Exercise Science, has been an exercise leader at the Rec for one year. Dunn works at the Rec for many reasons. She enjoys exercising and it is a fun job to have. "I get to help people when I exercise, and I have fun doing it," Dunn said. When asked why she picked the job she did, Dunn said, " I got started with an exercise leader program last year and really liked it. So, I chose to get certified through the Aerobic Fitness Association of America (AFAA)." The diversity of the people and the fact that the Rec is close to campus are also reasons why Dunn likes working at the Rec. "I like working with the other aerobic instructors here at the Rec, too," Dunn said. Dunn plans to complete a one year dietetic internship after she graduates. She also has learned good communication skills at the Rec that will help her in the long run. "I have learned better communication skills, and I have also learned how to talk in front of a large group without being nervous," Dunn said. This spring semester, Dunn will be teaching Cardio Intervals, Aero Step, Basic Step and Abs& Back.

New Year's Resolutions for Life

Have you made your New Year's resolution yet? Better question - have you broken your New Year's resolution yet? If you made a resolution that goes "never eat, cut out, avoid, always, or other similar words" you've probably found out these are hard to follow when it comes to food. So for your New Year's resolution, why not make a new life resolution! Decide to learn to make better food choices using the food group pyramid as your guide, learn to enjoy smaller portions of the foods you choose, learn why you overeat, and find activities to help curb the urge to overeat. And don't forget to include some type of physical activity in your daily routine. Physical activity can be walking a little further from the parking lot, taking the steps instead of the elevator, walking the dog, or including a walk at lunch time. The activity should be aerobic and something you can comfortably do every day for at least twenty minutes. Start slowly and develop a plan you can live with. American Dietetic Association

Nicholls leaves K-State, joins CSU

BY EDIE HALL

Kansas State Collogian

Peter Nicholls' English heritage came through when he said it would be a "wrench" to say goodbye to K-State. Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, recently accepted the provost position at Colorado State University. Nicholls said he has mixed emotions about taking over the

"On one hand, it's a step forward, a higher level of m very, very responsibility, and I'm very, very honored to have been selected for this position," Nicholls said. "On the other hand, I've been at K-State for 10 years, and I have enormous respect and love for this institution. It will be difficult to say goodbye."

Nicholls, a native of England, came to the United States in 1971 to teach math courses at Northern Illinois University. He was hired as K-State's dean in 1991. During his time at K-State, Nicholls also taught math and freshman seminar.

Tony Frank, vice president for research and information technology at CSU, said the university's provost search began in early October.

Nicholls said he was attracted to CSU because it is a land-grant institution with similar priorities and missions as K-State

Discussion continues on half-cent sales tax

BY MICHAEL WATSON Kansas State Collegian

The City Commission needs to hear more feedback from the public before voting to retain a half-cent sales tax, city commissioner Brad Everett said.

When the law enforcement sales tax ends in late 2003 or early 2004, county and city commissioners will need to agree where the half-cent sales tax will go or if it

The County Commission proposed Thursday that the money be used for $16 million in improvements to county roads and bridges and economic development.

"We need to keep the taxes where they are, but I do not support using the money for roads and economic development," Everett said. "A full consensus is needed to move forward."

Everett said he agrees an investment on county roads and economic development is important, but the half-cent sales tax should not be used on these items. An agreement needs to be reached that will excite voters and motivate them to vote for the item on the November ballot, he said.

"Voters may get excited about roads and economic development, but that's not what my gut is telling me. We need that dialogue to move forward."

The current sales tax is 6.9 percent. If an agreement is reached and voters pass the resolution, sales tax will remain the same. If the resolution fails, sales taxes will drop one-half cent.

K-State pitches food-safety facility to legislators on campus

BY SARAH BAHARI

Kansas State Collegian

K-State proposed a much-anticipated $40 million food-safety facility to an attentive Kansas Legislature on Thursday.

The building — tour years in the making — is part of a $100 million bond proposal that includes life science research at the University of Kansas and aviation research at Wichita State University. Funding is projected to begin in 2004 and last for five years.

Of the 165 legislators, about 110 made the trek from Topeka to Manhattan, marking the first time the Legislature has ever convened outside the Statehouse.

"This is the most important meeting ever held at K-State or Manhattan in the history of these two institutions," President Jon Wefald said. "It is truly historic."

All three universities outlined their proposals at the meeting. K-State's presentation focused on the need for food safety in the face of emerging biological threats.

"Agriculture is unprotected and quite vulnerable," Wefald said. "All you need for agriterrorism is one case of foot-and-mouth, then everyone shuts down exports."

An outbreak like this would be devastating to the Kansas economy and the nation, he said. It could even triple the cost of food.

Agriculture is a prime target for terrorist groups, Jerry Jaax, associate provost for

There would be a low profile for detection and a high personal safety for the attackers, Jaax said. It would devastate the economy, lessen confidence in the U.S. government and cause mass social instability, he added.

K-State's facility would help to ensure something like that doesn't happen.

It would include laboratories for studying

Level 3 pathogens, just a step below the most dangerous, like Ebola, which falls into Level 4. It also would include the nation's first contained slaughter facility for research into dangerous food production pathogens that could infect plants and animals.

"Nowhere in the world would there be a comparable facility," Wefald said.

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., and Rep. Jerry Moran, R-Kan., also spoke at the meeting. Moran said the federal government has taken a strong interest in research.

"As a result of Sept. 11, interest in agterrorism has dramatically increased," he said.

Facilities like these could help Kansas receive money in federal grants, Roberts said. Several legislators mentioned the $426 million hole in the state budget. Still, many million hole in the state budget. Still, many urged their colleagues to look beyond the challenges they face now.

"We cannot afford to not invest in research capital," Roberts said. "This is a blue chip investment that will exceed expectations and benefit Kansas." Sen. Steve Morris, R-Hugoton, and Rep.

Kenny Wilk, R-Lansing, organized the trip after visiting K-State in the fall. Wilk said this gave his colleagues a chance to focus on the issue.

"At the Statehouse, there's phones ringing, constituents. There's a thousand things going on," he said. "It's hard to get 15 minutes of focus."

Wilk said the complexity and importance of this proposal required more time and focus. Members of the Legislature plan to introduce a bill next week, Wilk said. Hearings will begin soon after that.

Wefald said the No. 1 benefit of having a facility like this on campus would be a new ability to serve the country.

"This building is for America," Wefald said:
"Not just Kansas."

Remember, celebrate and act.
These three simple words are the theme of this year's Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week, which will begin Saturday evening and end
Jan. 26.

"I think it's just saying that we need to remember the life that he led and the things he stood for," said Sarah Decke, chair of the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week Committee.

The week's activities are sponsored by the Manhattan community, as well as the university.

Several campus departments are planning activities for the week.

On Monday there will be a candlelight walk and vigil sponsored by the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity.

The walk will start at 6 p.m. at three places: Kramer and Derby dining centers and St. Isidore Catholic Student Center. The walk will conclude at All Faiths Chapel at 6:30 p.m. for a vigil and remembrance ceremony.

On Wednesday, K-State alumnus John Brooks Slaughter will deliver a speech at 10:30 a.m. in Forum Hall. Slaughter was the first African-American to serve as director for the National Science Foundation.

Decke said the terrorist attacks had a positive effect on this year's observance of King.

"There is much more of a focus on unity this year." Decke said.

"We need to realize that we have differences, but we still need to come together."

She also said two events were created especially because of the tragedy.

agedy.

An interfaith dialogue titled,

"Music of Non-Violence, Justice, Peace, Love and Freedom," will take place from 12:15 to 1:30 p.m. Thursday in the Union Courtyard, featuring the K-State Choir.

The week will conclude with a peace-oriented town forum, "Our Fears: Bringing Healing and Peace." The forum will begin at 2 p.m. in the council chamber of Manhattan City Hall.

Also, due to recent confusion among Americans about the Islamic faith, Don Fallon, coordinator for religious activities, will be giving a tour of an Islamic mosque Jan. 25 at 1224 Hylton Heights.

Decke said she would encourage more people to get involved in the week's activities.

week's activities.

"I would like to see greater participation." Decke said. "In the past, it's been a little poor. It would be great if we could have more students come out."

Aggieville salon opens new satellite location in Union

Crimpers Too opened Monday in the K-State Student Union.

The salon is an expansion of Crimpers, located in Aggieville. Crimpers Too is located on the Recreation Level of the Union where The Hair Care Center previously was located.

Libby York Stauder, marketing and promotions manager for the Union, said Crimpers responded immediately to the offer of expanding their business.

Stauder said the Union was looking for a hair salon that could offer longer hours than The Hair Care Center.

"We were interested and thought it was a good opportunity," said

Cheryl Wilson, owner of Crimpers. Crimpers Too is open 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturdays.

Wilson said Crimpers Too is a full service satellite salon, and that it offers a wide variety of services to students, faculty, staff and visitors. Wilson said nine of their professionally licensed and experienced stylists will be rotating from the Crimpers salon in Aggieville to Crimpers Too.

"This makes it more convenient for customers," Wilson said.

Wilson said the expansion has been exciting. She said the salon has kept busy since its opening.

"It's been a great experience so far," Wilson said.

Manhattan High receives third bomb threat of year

Manhattan High School received its third bomb threat this academic school year Thursday.

A female voice called in a bomb threat to the West Campus at 12:41 p.m. Administrators immediately locked down the building and searched the school grounds.

"Students were told that a bomb threat had been called in, and they needed to stay in their classrooms," said Michele Jones, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 coordinator of communications and public relations.

"After the administration checked the school grounds inside and out, students were released to go back to class."

It took about a half hour for administrators to check the school grounds. Nothing was found, and students returned to their classes at about 1:15

The investigation is ongoing with the Riley County Police Department. An administrative team is developing a plan to deal with bomb threats.

Enron Corp. fires Arthur Andersen accounting firm

WASHINGTON - Enron Corp. fired the Arthur Andersen accounting firm Thursday in the aftermath of the auditor's massive destruction of documents, said an attorney for the bankrupt energy giant.

"We're very troubled about the destruction of the documents, and we're very concerned about the accounting advice we got," said Washington attorney Robert Bennett. who is representing Enron.

Bennett said Enron informed Andersen of the dismissal late. Thursday afternoon.

The firing came as congressional investigators pressed the accounting firm for more documents concerning Enron's business activities.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee released documents from Andersen showing that nearly a year ago the accounting firm had strong misgivings about Enron's use of partnerships that kept hundreds of millions of dollars in losses off Enron's balance sheet.

During a high-level meeting in early February, Andersen executives expressed concern about Enron's offthe-books accounting of profits from its partnerships, especially one headed by Andy Fastow, Enron's former chief financial officer.

ATTACK DEVELOPMENTS

- The Pentagon sent more than 200 troops to the Philippines to help local forces fighting an extremist group linked to al-Qaeda.
- Richard Reid, the airline passenger accused of trying to ignite explosives. in his shoes, was indicted on charges of being an al-Qaeda-trained terrorist.
- The fourth planeload of detainees in less than a week left from Kandahar for a high-security jail at the U.S. Navy base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

There were 30 prisoners aboard the flight, bringing the total flown out to 110 and about 320 remaining at Kandahar.

- U.S. officials tentatively concluded that Osama bin Laden's terrorist group had not developed the means to produce chemical, biological or radiological weapons when the United States began bombing Afghanistan.
- The U.N. Security Council adopted sanctions Wednesday against Osama bin Laden, his terror network and remnants of the Taliban - requiring all nations to impose arms embargoes and freeze their finances.

The resolution ends sanctions against Afghanistan, imposed on the Taliban in November 1999 to pressure the hard-line militia to hand over bin Laden for trial in the 1997 bombings of two U.S. embassies in east Africa.

Q: I met someone I really like over break and they live in another state. Is a long-distance relationship practical? - Lonely in Manhattan

Dear Lonely in Manhattan,

Ah yes, the time honored question of how to keep the love of your life in your life with only seven states between you.

The answer, my friend, is not complex. What the other person does not know will not hurt them.

Live your life. Cheat, lie or be devious if you are so inclined. Hold nothing back.

The real key to maintaining a healthy long-distance relationship is to make the other person believe you are very dependent on them.

Make them think you sit around the apartment waiting for their nightly phone call. Tell them you love them and they are the only one. Then hang up and call that backup date, telling them the same things.

It is not prudent to plan your future at this point. If true love does prevail, it can wait until you are together geographically.

Bottom line — let your special someone pursue greener pastures. Blame yourself for the inability to maintain a relationship and cheating them out of living their life. Tell them it is time to break up.

Derek is a senior in milling

Dear Lonely in Manhattan.

First of all, I should start off by saying that I have been in a few longdistance relationships myself, so my opinion might be a little slanted.

The viability of a longdistance relationship depends solely on the level of commitment between the couple. Both of you must be devoted to making the relationship work or it

Long-distance relationships can ultimately bring many wonderful things to your life. For example, you can take time to explore your own interests. Long-distance relationships also can be easier than the conventional local relationship. A boyfriend or girlfriend that lives far away will give you more time for enjoying college

In addition, staying with this "holiday hook-up" will ensure a special someone and possibly a date for Valentine's Day.

Last, but certainly not least, you won't ever become that couple on campus that holds hands like they're still in high school. That's reason enough to give it a try.

Cow welcomes new technology to Hale Library

BY EDIE HALL

Kansas State Callegian

When Dee Bailey isn't roaming around Hale Library dressed as a Hereford cow, she enjoys her regular job as a reference generalist librarian.

On Thursday, Hale officials celebrated the completion of phase 2 of their project to install 200 new computers and other technology.

To make students aware of this step, Bailey handed out flyers in the shape of dollar bills to remind students their moneycomprised the majority of the funds for the project. To celebrate the new Gateway computers the library bought, Bailey dressed as a cow.

Karen Cole, associate dean of K-State Libraries, and Student Body President Kyle Barker also were available to speak to students about the changes.

'We are just wanting to welcome back the students," Cole said. "We wanted to remind them that phase 2 is complete as a direct result of the funds allocated by Student Senate. We are doing this to say thank you, and that this new technology is for you to use." Brice Hobrock, dean of Hale Library, said that the project fell under two of the seven goals that support Hale's vision. Library officials want to help students and faculty with their information needs and link them to global information resources.

Phase 2 included installing 100 new computers in Hale. The last 40 computers were put in place during winter break

Also, a wireless network of laptops was installed. Thirteen laptop computers with wireless capability are now available to check out.

Approximately 50 "profile" computers were added throughout the library. Laurel Littrell, chairperson of the InfoCommons task force, said, the profile computers have flat screen monitors and look like modified laptops with fullsized keyboards. They were selected because they fit in the library's carrels, which helped save money.

Phase I was completed close to a year ago and included installing 100 new computers in the InfoCommons area. The first phase was mostly funded by the $1 per credit hour student technology fee.

Littrell said that Hale still plans to add printers in the 24-hour study area and other locations, but this has been delayed because they are still waiting on parts.

She also said that there is no official phase III, but officials still plan to add a student media center. It would house the five "higher end" computers purchased as a part of phase 2.

Cole was excited about seeing the project finish up.

"I'm high on this," Cole said. "When students get involved in a project like this, it's easy to see why we are here. It's exciting."

A survey for students wanting to comment on the library will be available at www.tib.ksu.edu it to be successful, she said the national and state legislatures should let teachers and professionals create the programs the federal government is financially supporting.

Nancy Kole, principal of Lee Elementary School, said the act's promise to allocate more funds for tutoring and after-school programs will benefit Manhattan students.

She said she wishes similar programs targeted younger students. The law promises assistance for children as early as the third grade.

Kole said its reading program does not start early enough to be fully effective. She said children with reading troubles are difficult to help unless intervention is achieved in kindergarten or first grade.

Assistant Superintendent for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Marcia Bone said she likes the attention that education is getting within the federal government, but she has some worries.

"I am concerned that we are not going to get the necessary funding to pay for the assessments." Bone said.

She said she believes the federal government requires annual assessments without plans to actually pay for them. Federal money would be better spent going to teaching costs, she said, since testing does not help children learn.

"I don't think the federal government should be involved in the assessments," she said, "Testing every child is spending resources that could go to teaching instead."

REVOLTING RETAIL

National retail chain affects communities with policies

here is a menace in our society that recently has threatened the American way of life. Through its cold, calculating practices, this entity has affected every citizen from coast to

I'm speaking, of course, of Wal-Mart, the corporate mongrel that is destroying our nation one happy smile at a time. It has accomplished this, largely, because of its ability to leach its tentacles into almost every community in the United States.

There is hope, however, that in the future we will be able to work toward crippling Wal-Mart's power.

I know about Wal-Mart's policies firsthand. This past summer, I accomplished only two things: dyeing my hair dark blue and slicing an assortment of meats and cheeses in my local Wal-Mart deli. When I wasn't scaring old ladies with my Smurf hairstyle or pondering life's mysteries. I noticed some disturbing

First off, after examining my paycheck, I realized that Wal-Mart employees do not make very much money. As a college student, I can live with this. But for many single mothers on welfare trying to raise a family, this amount of pay makes it hard to climb out

This creates a dangerous cycle that cannot be broken, because for many of these people, Wal-Mart is the only place for a person with little or no education to work.

As we all know, the family is the basic unit of our society and community.

By directly endangering families, Wal-Mart pushes communities down a slippery slope that affects our state and nation.

It is at this point that I decided to do a little research. I was astonished to find how Wal-Mart seems to mislead its consumers, all in a crusade for

According to a PBS documentary, "Store Wars," Wal-Mart often is courted by communities because it is believed a new store will jumpstart their economy. What actually happens is a mass capital flight, in which money that normallywould have been circulated from local businesses to the community leaves Dollars spent at Wal-Mart are plucked from the community and sent to corporate headquarters. There is a reason that half of the ten richest people in the world have the last name "Walton," according to Forbes Magazine.

Wal-Mart counters this argument by pointing to their "Community Give-Back" programs. We've all seen the pictures in newspapers of a smiling Wal-Mart manager handing over a huge check to a needy organization. The problem herein is the occurrence of such donations

Wal-Mart donates four-tenths of 1 percent of its net profits to charity, compared to the average of 1 percent that most retail stores, contribute according to "Store Wars." Basically, Wal-Mart hopes to take our money but falsely convinces us it is giving it back.

Knowing the abuses practiced by Wal-Mart, what can we do?

To begin with, we can take our business elsewhere. I realize it is impossible to stop shopping at Wal-Mart, but by purchasing goods at local stores we are reinvesting capital back in our communities. It isn't so much that Wal-Mart's profit margins are going to be hurt, but that we have contributed another dollar that will go toward our own well-We also can get involved with local organizations. such as the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice, that petition for increased wages for employees. If successful, many single-parent families will have the opportunity to escape poverty.

Jared Wiesner

Finally, we can educate new communities that are considering building a new store. Wal-Mart opens a new "Super Center" every two days in the world, and hopes to make it every day in 10 years. By encouraging communities to denounce Wal-Mart we can begin to reverse this horrific trend

Remembe these ideas next. time you are in Wal-

Mart. Hopefully, through a grassroots campaign, we can begin to tear down the house the blue devil built and rebuild our communities.

Fears limit potential of genetically modified organisms

he more things change, the more they stay the same. New technologies and advancements in science are constantly being added to the list of the great achievements of the human race, and each one is met with resistance from those failing to understand the possibili-

We are experiencing this now with another great triumph in science - genetically modified organisms, which are made by recombining DNA to scientifically engineer foods.

Despite the possibilities these genetically modified organisms, or GMOs, promise for agriculture and feeding the world, there still remains a deluge of criticism from those fearing change.

When vaccines were introduced, the public scoffed at the idea of deliberately sticking a needle directly into the arm and inserting a chemical grown from mold into the bloodstream. That same preposterous idea has saved innumerable lives.

Now some people want to ban GMOs. In 1999, anti-biotechnology activists created a circus (minus elephants and big red shoes) over Starlink corn, which contained a special protein not natural to corn. Some of it found its way into Taco Bell's tacos.

After the news broke, people who felt the least bit ill after eating one of their tacos assumed it was an allergic reaction. Did they ever consider that maybe it was the refried beans that made them feel nauseated?

The American Council on Science and Health said the paranoia about bioengineered foods was distorted and exaggerated > and completely without scientific merit. It was not the food that made them sick. It was the activists.

Still, narrow-minded activists are adamant that frankenfoods mean death to our civilization as we know it because we are meddling with evolution. The opposite argument seems to be more accurate. Discontinuing progress built on our innovation is where civilization fails.

Tanner Ehmke

Without continuing improvements in how we produce or make food, like using GMOs, millions of people will continue to die from hunger or go blind from malnu-

In the Democratic Republic of Congo alone, more than 2.5 million people live in misery and hunger, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. Fourteen other African countries also are facing food emergencies.

There are millions more starving worldwide.

Who wants to be the one to break the news to these people that we can no longer help them because it's not Nature's way?

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, GMO varieties helped U.S. soybean farmers save $216 million on weed control in 1999. Pesticide use in the United States has also decreased by more than 1,200 tons per year. thanks to GMOs. How is this bad?

Others insist on labeling foods that contain GMOs, even though there is a complete lack of evidence of any apparent dangers the foods might have.

Nonetheless, suppose we were to label GMO foods. There are labels on tobacco products with a warning from the Surgeon General stating that if you use the product, you are taking the risk of getting cancer and dying, which no reasonable scientist can > know. We just like putting labels on things. The fact is, according to a statement made by Professor Wolfgang van Daelen in Berlin, there are no empirical or plausible theoretical arguments that genetically modified foods represent a greater risk to the consumer than modified foods cause...well, we don't normal food. If the government were to require labeling, they would be feeding an unfounded fear and paranoia, based on myth in the people they govern.

Jennifer Kimball/Collegian

Other leaders in our world's history have run their government with similar tactics -Mussolini, Stalin and Hitler, just to name a

All things considered, the banning and labeling of GMOs cannot be considered progress. Granted, there should be a watchful eye the technology as it develops, but to halt it altogether is not logical, as some would have it.

We have to find a way to do more with less. Do organizations such as Greenpeace International and the Natural Law Party, who are so eager to condemn GMOs, have a better solution for feeding the growing population? Maybe some of our anti-biotechnology friends should be rollingup their sleeves rather than rollingup joints at Phish.

When we analyze the alternatives, like burning rainforests to increase cultivated acreage for growing food, GMOs seem quite reasonable. Other pieces of the puzzle are just as valuable, like finding a better method of distribution of current food supplies to impoverished nations. But that alone won't work.

Technological change should be embraced, but many refuse to accept what it has to offer. You can slow it down, but you can never stop it.

Tanner is a graduate student in mass communications, You can e-mail him at tce2225@ksu.edu.

Women sports' victories bring student support

hen it comes to Wildcat sports, this is the year of the women.

Fans are flocking as the women's basketball team rises closer to the top of the polls. Volleyball also finished an outstanding season last semester.

These teams are a great asset to the campus. Too often, women's sports are treated with disdain and overshadowed by men's sports.

Regular women's fans are rare compared to men's fans. However, this year the university is experiencing a change.

Title IX requires equality between men's and women's varsity sports teams. These regulations often are blamed for limiting the range of men's sports at universities.

But this year, women's sports are outperforming their male counterparts.

Writer responds to national bandwagon jumping effect

This bandwagon jumping ("The Bandwagon Effect," Thursday) always bothered me, too.

Not only did everybody become K-State women's basketball fans as soon as the team went from painful to watch to being one of the best in the nation and start flying the flag after the worst attack on the U.S. from a foreign entity since the British burnt down Washington, D.C., in the War of 1812. but how about winter coats? As soon as the weather got cool, somehow everybody decided to be fashionable and don winter coats.

And then telephones? People got along just fine without them until Alexander Graham Bell invents one and now everybody has got to own one.

Don't forget about toilets. All of a sudden everybody has to have indoor plumbing as if we're all too good to crap out the window like people have done since the beginning of time.

All our founding fathers used to crap out the window, but I guess this is beneath all you trend followers.

It's as if people can't think for themselves.

New restaurants add variety to Manhattan dining scene

BY NICK BRATKOVIC Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan restaurant community is getting a little bigger this winter since three new restaurants have opened.

The restaurants, opening despite a slowing economy, are in areas of Manhattan ranging from Plaza West Shopping Center to Aggieville. Each has a different menu, and is looking to serve consumers a different type of food.

Stroud's Restaurant and Bar, a Kansas City area-based restaurant specializing in pan-fried chicken, will open next week.

The restaurant is owned and operated by Troy Farha, who also owns the Wichita location of Stroud's. It features a variety of menu items ranging from KC strips to filet mignon.

Farha said the restaurant chain has been known for its pan-fried chicken since opening in 1933 in Kansas City.

Manhattan residents can now try the chicken at 3003 Anderson Ave, just adjacent to El Cazador Mexican Restaurant.

Inside, the restaurant features a variety of different rooms, which cater to different sets of diners. Some are more romantic, for special dinners, and others have tables that can be moved together for bigger crowds or dining, Farha Stroud's also will have a separate bar entrance where people can pick up carry-out items and finger foods, ranging from wings to gizzards.

Farha said bar hours have not been officially set. They plan to serve customers looking to grab a bite or drink after a softball game. They also plan to open early on Saturdays in the fall for K-State home football games.

Stroud's is the newest restaurant that is opening. Manhattan additions So Long Saloon and Cox Barbecue, where owners could not be reached, both opened in the past two months.

Lyle Butler, president and CEO of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the economy suffered a hit after Sept. 11, but is starting to show signs of recovery with new restaurants opening.

"I think after 9-11 it was kind of a slowdown, not only national, but local and regional as well," he said, "We found less interest in expansion, but now as people are getting their feet back on the ground we are seeing more inquiries."

Typically, Butler said the restaurants open in waves throughout the year.

Rob Goode, one of the owning partners in So Long Saloon, said the restaurant and bar already had been in the works before the economy became sluggish.

"We started a year ago, but once you start, it's nice to have good timing, but we were confident with all the experience we had involved," Goode said.

The Saloon, which opened five weeks ago, is looking for the student crowd to intermingle with the local Manhattan crowd. It serves a variety of grilled food, and everything is made from scratch.

"It is a gourmet grill food," manager Jason Humes said.

The menu features everything from gourmet burgers and sandwiches to buffalo, chicken, bratwurst and a variety of salads.

Goode said the restaurant wants customers to get a good meal at a good price.

"We want to come in for lunch and dinner and get out for $10 apiece," Goode said.

The restaurant also has a restored-saloon bar, which the group purchased off E-Bay from an old hotel in Wyoming.

K-State is 6-8 overall, and 0-3 in the Big 12 conference. Here's a quick look at what you missed during the break.

K-State's record dropped to 4-3 after losing its first game to Northwestern. Larry Reid scored 20 points and Pervis Pasco and Nick Williams. each added 15 in the losing effort. Overall, the Cats were held to just 30-percent shooting from

Dec. 15 NORTH TEXAS

Junior center Pervis Pasco poured in 30 points with 11-of-17 shooting and grabbed 11 rebounds to lead K-State past the Mean Green at Bramlage Coliseum. The win was the Wildcats' first in three games and extended North Texas' losing streak to six straight. Nick Williams added 19 points for K-State.

Dec. 19 WESTERN CAROLINA

K-State led by 15 at halftime, but a 15-0 run early in the second half fueled the Catamount's comeback effort, as K-State's record dropped to 5-4. Gilson DeJesus led the Cats with 18 points with 5-of-7 shooting from behind the three-point arc, and Travis Reynolds added his third doubledouble of the season.

Dec. 22 K-STATE

Despite cutting a 16-point lead down to one point with less than six minutes to play in the second half, K-State fell to the then No. 12 Hawkeyes thanks to Luke Recker's clutch shooting and some quality bench production. Pervis Pasco again led the Cats in scoring and rebounding with 16 points and 13 boards.

Dec. 29 FAIRLEIGH DICKINSON

Five K-State players scored in double digits, led by Pervis Pasco's 19-point, 10-rebound night, to snap a two-game losing streak at Bramlage. The Wildcats avoided becoming the Knights' first victim of the season, dropping Fairleigh Dickinson's record to 0-11. It was Pasco's fourth double-double of the season.

Jan. 6 K-STATE

K-State dropped its first Big 12 contest of the year to the Red Raiders despite Phineas Atchison's 12-point night. Texas Tech went on an 11-0 run midway through the second half and held the Cats scoreless during the five-minute stretch to win Bobby Knight's first conference game as a Big 12 coach.

MISSOURI K-STATE

The then No. 17 Missouri ruined Larry Reid's comeback by out-muscling K-State in the post. Reid, who returned after a two-week spell on the bench due to injury, led the Cats with 17 points, but the Tigers put forth an inspired effort after losing to Iowa State, beating K-State by 15.

K-STATE BAYLOR

Free throw shooting hurt K-State the most, as the Cats dropped to 0-3 in the Big 12 after missing four of six second half free throws. K-State outshot the Bears from the field by 11 percent, but Baylor's 19-of-22 night at the charity stripe locked up the Bears' second win in hile students were away from K-State, men's basketball didn't let up one bit. The Wildcats finished their non-conference schedule in style, and have since moved into conference play. Unfortunately, the Big 12 has not been kind to the Cats so far.

Despite a solid effort from the Cats, Baylor's 73-70 win over K-State (6-8, 0-3) on Wednesday night dropped the Wildcats' record to 0-3 in the conference.

It was a step in the right direction, though, after struggling in many areas in losses to Texas Tech and then No. 17 Missouri.

Despite the Cats' 45-percent shooting against the Tigers on Jan. 12, K-State surrendered 19 offensive rebounds in an 81-66 loss.

For Coach Jim Wooldridge, it was easy to see where the problem was.

The rebounding in that game was the problem area that we couldn't overcome," Wooldridge said.

"We were really pleased with Quentin and his defensive effort on Kareem Rush, and I thought Larry played maybe his best defensive game of the year on Gilbert.

Even though he got some shots off, a lot of those shots came on second opportunities - when we were separated from them - but all in all, not a bad effort in that game."

In Lubbock, 19 turnovers sunk the Wildcat ship, as K-State came away empty-handed in its Big 12 opener. The Cats lost the contest 74-49 to the Red Raiders.

K-State relied on senior guard Phineas Atchison. who had to shoulder the load for the Cats in the absence of leading point scorer Larry Reid.

Atchison scored 12 points in 39 minutes for the

Despite the winless record, Reid said the first conference games have highlighted what K-State must focus on in order to be successful down the stretch.

"Getting rebounds on defense and not turning over the ball on offense are the main things we need to work on at this point," he said. "We can do it, though. It is all a matter of knowing what we have to accomplish and doing it."

With 13 conference games remaining for the Cats, Wooldridge said the team still has much to improve on in order to be where they want to be by season's end.

"We need longer stretches of good basketball," Wooldridge said. "I was pleased with the way we played at times against Tech and Missouri - we just need

Prior to Big 12 play, K-State completed its nonconference schedule by going 2-2 in its final four contests. The Wildcats dropped games to then No. 12 Iowa and Western Carolina, but easily defeated North Texas and Fairleigh Dickinson.

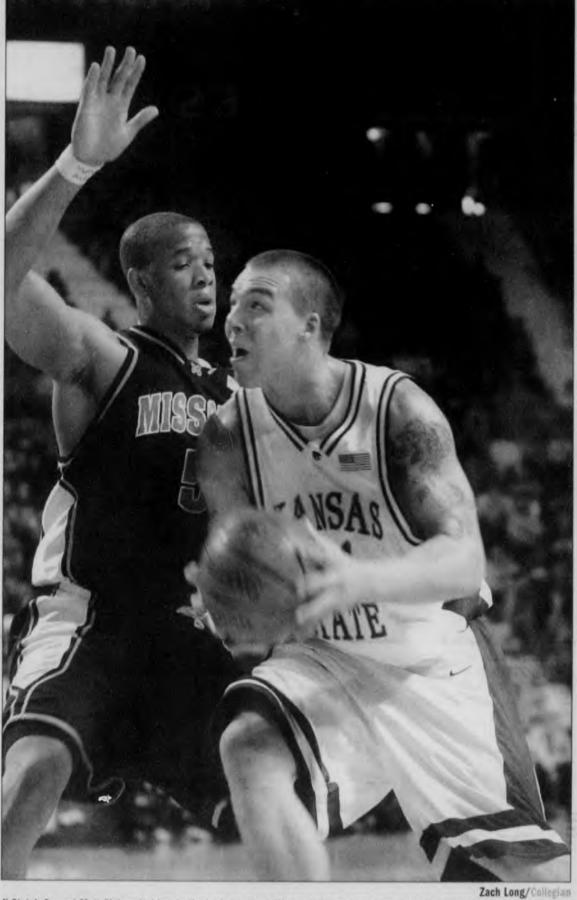

Against North Texas, center Pervis Pasco stole the spotlight, ripping the Mean Green for 30 points and 11 rebounds. The junior college transfer also recorded a career-high in blocks with five.

"It was a big man's dream to go out and have a performance like that," Pasco said.

"I just kept working hard throughout the entire game, and I am glad it paid off."

K-State's non-conference finale against Fairleigh Dickinson showcased the purple's offensive firepower, as the Cats pinned 88 points on the Knights. The Wildcats saw five players score in double figures, and K-State shot 52 percent from the field.

That kind of scoring diversity was an example of one area K-State has shown a marked improvement in team chemistry.

K-State's forward Matt Siebrandt drives to the basket against Missouri's Travon Bryant Jan. 12 at Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats lost to the Tigers 81-66.

Even though the Cats have idled at times on offense. Atchison said the strides being made in practice show the team has a lot to look forward to.

"We are starting to play a lot more together." Atchison said. "The ball movement is better on offense and on the defensive end, we are rotating and helping well - our team posture and that will be a big key in the long run for us."

However significant the woes might be for K-State at this point in the year, Reid said the success of the team comes down to just a few little things.

"We just have to go out there and play with complete confidence, knowing that we are capable of getting a win," Reid said.

"Nothing really has to change for us - get rebounds, run an offense and put the ball in the hole."

K-State looks forward to second half

BY SEAN PURCELL Kansas State Collegian

Like kids in grade school, K-State men's basketball has reached the halfway point, and the progress reports are out.

Although the Cats (6-8, 0-3) haven't quite played up to the expectations many had for them, Coach Jim Wooldridge still is pleased with the desire and determination his squad

"They have a willingness to try to carry out a plan and an intensity to work hard at what they are doing," Wooldridge said. "We've found out a lot about ourselves over the course of the year so far, but there is still a lot of learning going on, and we are working at that."

Many of those efforts are aimed toward offensive production. Before Big 12 play, the Cats had struggled getting out of the gate. usually taking a half to get into an offensive

Recently though, K-State has found its rhythm, which gives the team a boost in morale, senior guard Phineas Atchison said.

"It gave us a lot of confidence with the way we came out in the Missouri game," Atchison said. " But right now we are just working on playing together - that is the biggest issue because if we play together I think we can be a really good team."

Another concern for the Cats has been the production of the team's three-guard. Juniors Quentin Buchanan and Gilson DeJesus have combined for just 9.5 points per game and nearly four turnovers per contest, questions have begun to arise. "We need a more aggressive attitude from the three-guard - crashing boards and getting rebounds for us," senior guard Larry Reid said. "Then we also need to see more production on the offensive side - looking for a shot and running the offense more smoothly."

A non-productive three-guard isn't the only hole K-State is looking to fill, though. Travis Reynolds was suspended from the team indefinitely due to undisclosed reasons. The junior forward averaged 9.4 points per game and 6.3 rebounds in 12 games for the Wildcats.

Those vacancies have translated to a sputtering offense, and as a result, K-State has been losing games by big numbers.

But as disconcerting as those large-margin defeats-(Texas Tech (74-49) and Missouri (81-66)-might appear, the thumpings have brought about a new outlook for the team. Wooldridge said he has tried to focus on the positives from each contest instead of dwelling on the team's shortcomings.

"There are a lot of things we need to improve on," Wooldridge said. "They have made some progress, and we hope that they can continue to make the progress we are looking for out of them."

With each practice, the name of the game has been improvement, Wooldridge said. If you improve, you can't go anywhere but up. "We don't need to worry about what is coming up down the line - I don't think that is healthy for our team," Wooldridge said. "We tell the guys that nothing ever stays the same - you either go up or you go down because it's a continual effort to get better so that we aren't taking steps back, rather we are taking steps forward."

There is still much to look forward to with this team, but only time will tell whether they will reach their full potential by season's end, or if fans will just have to wait another year for the emergence of a top college basketball program at K-

I guess at the beginning of the season fans could look at this team under a narrow microscope. They were young. Five freshman and three junior college transfers equals inexperience. But one thing that could be agreed upon was that K-State basketball had a young program looking to bring a lot of potential to the table — the sky was the limit.

Now, half-way through this year's campaign, the blue infinity might not quite be the limit for the men's team, but you wouldn't get that impression talking to players and coaches. Head coach Jim Wooldridge doesn't intend to scrap this year's season, and the players aren't ready to do so either.

That makes this team scary and a force opponents shouldn't overlook.

So, with a few weeks remaining in the 2001-02 season, this basketball team has a lot to look forward to. Wooldridge and the men's squad continue to focus on improving and pushing forward, looking to land a few victories here and there, maybe even upset a couple big-time programs in the process.

But K-State is big-time. I am still

Cats seek improvement in Saturday's matchup with Cyclones

BY DEREK BOSS

Kanuas State Collegian

If any Big 12 team got a facelift this year, it was Iowa State.

The Cyclones, K-State's next opponent Saturday evening at Bramlage Coliseum, lost four starters off last year's league championship squad, including their floor leader, Jamaal Tinsley.

"You lose a first-round NBA player and four other seniors that played significant minutes, your team is going to change," Cats' Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

It's showed, too.

Larry Eustachy's club (9-9, 1-3) just lost its third conference game of the season, a 63-61 last-second heartbreaker to Colorado on Wednesday night.

The Cyclones only lost three league games all of last year, finishing 25-6 overall and 13-3 in the Big 12.

But K-State (6-8, 0-3), still looking for its first conference win of the year, knows it can't take anything for granted.

Senior Matt Siebrandt said the team realizes its back is against the wall.

"I feel like Saturday's a mustwin," he said.

"We really need a lot of people out there to support, because it's a huge game for us. I think it's almost a make-or-break-ourseason kind of game, because we really need the win to get some confidence back

"I know we're going to come out fighting, but we just need to take care of business, and I think we can win.'

That optimism might stem from K-State's last outing at Baylor. Saturday showdown lowa State (9-9, 1-3) at K-State (6-8,

The Cats outshot their opponent, connecting on 26-of-52 attempts for the game, and were led by Phineas Atchison's 16 points. Larry Reid added 14.

"I think last night at Baylor, they saw they could compete better on the road, and we had some guys play better." Wooldridge

"We're still disappointed in the loss, but there were some things that we did well enough to put ourself in a position to win the game.

dence, but we've got to find a way to get better. You can't win unless you get better, and that's where my focal point is right now."

Transfer Marcelo Da Barrosa also came up big for the purple, playing 20 minutes and tying a career-high with 10 points on 5-of-6 shooting.

"I thought I had a decent game last night, but I still have a lot of things to work on, such as defense and rebounding the ball," Da Barrosa said. Despite flashes of improvement against Baylor, though, the result was the same as seven of the Cats' last nine games — a loss. "I would assume they were very disappointed, and they should be." Wooldridge said of his players.

"They were right there, and they had a chance. A play here, a maybe gone the other way."

Yet, Da Barrosa, a newcomer on the team, said it's no time for the team to panic

He said he feels that the squad can rebound from its 0-3 league

"I wouldn't call it desperation," Da Barrosa said.

"We didn't have a good time by losing those three games, but I think we're ready to turn it over, compete and get some wins for

But Siebrandt said the team needs to keep its focus on what lies ahead. Wooldridge's club played well against the highlyranked Cyclones in 2001, especially in Ames, losing by just six points.

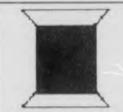

They were a really good team last year, and we played them tough," Siebrandt said, "and hopefully this year we'll have their

Living a dream; looking past the color of one's skin

BY MICHAEL WATSON Kansas State Collegian

It was not easy for a black man to make it in a white man's world during the time of the civil rights movement, a black Manhattan resident said.

John White said he remembers trying to buy a house on Anderson Avenue, but the agent would not sell him the house because they said it was unethical.

They would not let him live north of Yuma Street. He said he was upset with the discrimination, but the best he could do was roll with the punches.

"Manhattan was not a good place to be," White said. "Until the early '70s, there wasn't a place for me to eat in Manhattan. They would serve my wife because she is Caucasian, but not me. Shoe's Café, where the Chamber of Commerce is now, was the only place that didn't mind."

White said one incident that angered him was when a security guard at the train depot told him he could not drink from the white-only water fountain.

He was dressed in his Army uniform, heading to Vietnam to serve his country as a command sergeant

"When I went to get a drink of water, I felt a tapping on my back. A security guard said 'Hey boy, can't you read? This fountain is for whites. "only," White said.

I pointed to the stripes on my arm, three up, three down, with a diamond in the middle. I was a CSM and couldn't even get a drink of water because it was an all-white "fountain."

People across the nation faced the same segregation and discrimination White faced in Manhattan.

Schools were segregated in Manhattan until 1960. That is the year Gerry Walton, a Manhattan resident, said her 5-year-old daughter entered kindergarten. She was one of the first black children to attend a desegregated school.

"It was still the same, though," Walton said. "There was still segregation in the integrated schools. The teachers for one thing didn't know how to teach black kids."

Walton said she remembers one time her son had a math assignment. He was having trouble with the new math, so Walton went to talk to his teacher to get some help with the assignment.

The teacher said, "Oh. I didn't know you were interested."

Walton also found discrimination in the workplace. Walton remembers inquiring about a job opening in a telemarketing agency.

She was ignored when she went in to find more out about the job. She said she decided to speak up to find out about the job, and she got her questions answered, but was told they weren't hiring blacks. She said "Thank you" and left.

"I pursued it," she said. "I talked to people about how I was discriminated against. I didn't want the job after that, but I wanted to make what happened known."

According to documents at the Riley County Historical Society, segregation ended in the classroom when Douglas School closed in the early 1960s, but there were still public swimming pools, restaurants, theaters and churches that banned

"... I pointed to the stripes on my arm, three up, three down and a diamond in the middle. I was a CSM and couldn't even get a drink of water because it was an all-white fountain."

John White, Manhattan Resident

blacks or had black sections. This is what people like Martin Luther King Jr. were protesting. King's dream

In his "I Have a Dream" speech, King said part of his dream was that one day his four children would live in a world where they would be judged by the color of their character and not by the color of their skin.

In 1957, King traveled 780,000 miles and made 208 speeches. Six years later, 250,000 civil-rights supporters attended the March on Washington where King delivered his famous "I Have a Dream" speech.

Martin Luther King Jr. spoke nationwide. He even came to Manhattan in 1968 and delivered a convocation at K-State, two months before he was assassinated.

Betsy Bergen, professor of family studies and human services, said King's message was accepted at K-State. She said there was racial tension at K-State at that time, but it was not destructive unrest.

"It was a be-careful-what-you-say type of unrest," she said.

She said faculty groups went to fraternities, sororities and residence halls to speak to students about the tension and King's message.

There was a lot of discussion, but students weren't violent or disruptive,

His message was the same across the nation, and so was his delivery through peaceful protests, said Mike Davis, graduate student in African American history.

King urged men and women to break the laws that were promoted segregation.

"Looking at the times, Martin Luther King Jr. stirred up a lot of people. He did it using passive resistance," Davis said.

In his letter from a Birmingham jail to a clergyman in Alabama, he. spoke about why his duty was to be in Birmingham. He was there because there was injustice. He said unjust laws need to be broken, and he needed to be there because there was injustice."

The holiday

November 1983, President Ronald Reagan signed the law creating the Martin Luther King, Ir. holiday, more than 15 years after King was killed. The holiday was first observed in Bergen said King's message still holds meaning today. He has affected people nationwide. She said society has come a long way, but people have not completely lived up to his dream.

"His dream was that one day all men would not be judged by the color of their skin. Nationwide, we haven't lived up to that, but at K-State, I think we have done a pretty improvement."

The national fraternity of Alpha Phi Alpha is coordinating efforts to establish a memorial in Washington. D.C., for King. Offerings are being accepted at All Faiths during the candlelight vigil Saturday night.

"We do this in remembrance of what he's done and to continue history. It is more than just his dream," said Micheal Bass, president of Alpha Phi Alpha, said.

choosing a final candidate.

In early December, three finalists were selected and invited to the CSU campus for an interview and to meet various campus leaders and groups.

"This part of the process seemed like an endurance test," Frank said. "They started at breakfast and met everyone you can think of: a council of deans, faculty council leadership, student leaders and on down the list. They weren't done until around dinner-

After discussing the three remaining applicants, the search committee recommended Nicholls to Al Yates, president of CSU.

Frank said the committee was looking for a person who had experience in managing a complex higher education program with broad studies. He said most universities offer broad curriculums, so a provost must provide leadership and be able to represent each curriculum well.

"I am extremely excited about Peter Nicholls coming to CSU," Frank said. "All of us just felt like it was an extremely good match, not only in his experience, but also in his ability to step in and work as part of our leadership team."

As provost, Nicholls will be the chief academic officer. He will head all deans of the various colleges at CSU, and will help set the university's direction and

Nicholls said he feels his position at K-State will help him perform his new job as provost. He said having a feel for the mission of a major land-grant institution and working with various students and faculty will give him experience with the broad range of curriculums he will encounter as "There is a spirit of cooperation at K-State that has become a tradition," Nicholls said, "The deans work together, and think more of cooperation than competition. I enjoy the atmosphere here, and I hope to work with it at CSU."

President Jon Wefald spoke gratefully of Nicholls and his performance.

"Peter Nicholls has done an outstanding job at K-State," Wefald said. "He has a very caring attitude and is good with dealing with all kinds of challenges. We are just so pleased that he's gotten this opportunity. It's just excellent."

Nicholls will start at CSU on March 1. Suzy Auten, administrative assistant to Provost James Coffman, said K-State is searching for an interim dean who will take over the office until a permanent replacement for Nicholls can be found. Auten said applications for: the interim position are due Tuesday. K-State hopes to name the interim dean around Feb. 1.

Wefald said it usually takes nine to 10 months to find a permanent replacement. Auten said K-State will advertise nationally to fill this position and appoint a search committee.

Applications for the permanent dean position will be due late in the spring semester. K-State expects to have a new dean of the College of Arts and Sciences in November or December.

Goins said he has a very extensive background in music. Besides teaching music in Boston, Chicago and Alabama, he said he also has toured in Europe and recorded more than 20 albums.

Goins said he has felt like a natural from day one.

"I have played guitar since I was born," he said. "I was born to play guitar as natural as drinking water."

Goins said several styles of jazz are heard in the performances. "Anything from blues, ballads and hard bebop to bossas," he said. "Space is cleared out for people

"They complement each other quite nicely," he said. "Every situation is a learning situation. When I teach, I play. And when I play, I teach."

Contributing in tonight's performance is Kansas City native Steve Rigazzi, Rigazzi, bassist and friend of Goins, said he first collaborated with Goins about a year ago.

I got called to back him up at a performance in Kansas City," he said. "We were right on the money, and it's been great ever since."

Rigazzi said he helps improve the shows because of the great relationship between him and Goins.

"It's musical chemistry," he said. "It adds excitement to the performance."

Pomeroy performs acoustic set at Aggieville business

With bongo drums, light guitar and a raw sound, the scene looked something similar to "MTV Unplugged" on Thursday at CD TradePost, but it was Manhattan natives Pomeroy stopping by to play a toned-down live set for the

Thursday evening Pomeroy performed a more acoustic version of their popular show for a small crowd in the Aggieville music

The band played the night before in Colorado Springs, Colo., and stopped in Manhattan on their way to a show in Lawrence tonight.

Seth Lamborn, CD Tradepost manager, said it was Pomeroy's idea to have the light session.

"We got a phone call from them, and it sounded like a great idea to me," he said. "There aren't too many live shows in Manhattan and we like to support local music."

Lamborn said he feels Pomeroy was a great band to have perform live in the store.

They are power popular here. The kids love them," he said. "I can hold my cane one day and say Pomeroy performs they played here."

As anticipated as this event was, challenges were to be expected. Lamborn said he was worried about one thing in partic-

"I was worried about the setup and space. How's the space going to work?" he said. "Is there going to be enough room for the people here?

This show will increase Pomeroy's fan base, but Kacy Douglas, marketing and franchise director, said she hopes it does

"Hopefully, it will increase the awareness of our store," she said. "Pomeroy has a strong following in Manhattan and we hope to see new customers, new faces."

One of the men behind the music, David Fairbanks - vocals and hand percussion - said he is just as excited to perform a stripped-down set as the audience is to see the show.

a different side of us, while at the same time, we get our main point across," he said.

Fairbanks said Pomeory has performed acoustic sets before. "We played one at Rusty's Last Chance about a year and a half ago," he said.

"We decided to play at CD TradePost to help promote Tuesday's show. It's also a new store in town, and we thought it would be mutually advantageous."

As important as the audience is to Pomeroy, Fairbanks said he feels the audience can't relate as well to an acoustic set.

"With acoustic versus electric it is definitely two different shows," he said. "There are a lot of similarities, but I am convinced that a full-on Pomeroy live show can't be recreated any other way."

Fairbanks said that even though there are vast differences between the two types of shows, acoustic does have it's positives.

"There's a lot more intimacy," he said. "The audience can just stand there five feet away from the band and be a part of the show. I hope it shows people we are a band of diversity.

she made sure not to miss this show.

"Their live shows are awesome. I have been a fan ever since I saw them in concert in 2000," she said. "I like the way the emcee delivers the lyrics, and the rhythm isn't like a lot of things I have heard."

Garrett said she enjoyed the relaxed set, but noticed differences.

"It was really laid-back and more personal," she said.

Their sound was raw and the crowd vibe was different. I liked it a lot more than I thought I would."

The northern city of Hadera. located near the line separating Israel from the West Bank, has been the scene of several Palestinian bombings in recent months.

In a recent attack in Hadera, a Palestmian suicide bomber set off explosives strapped to his body on a bus on a main highway Nov. 29, killing himself and three Israeli passengers.

The militant Islamic Jihad group later claimed responsibility for the blast.

Israel renewed its blockade of several Palestinian towns in the West Bank on Thursday following the killings of three civilians by Palestinian gunmen.

In the West Bank, a Palestinian militia leader died Thursday in an exchange of fire with Israeli troops.

This week's violence came after a lull in fighting that followed Palestinían leader Yasser Arafat's announcement of a cease-fire in

"I will not support the proposal to improve roads and economic development," Everett said. "I will flow and move and support another idea, but I want to have something for taxpayers to see a payback for their tax dollars.

City Commissioner Mark Taussig said money should not be allocated to the county. Not only should the money be kept for city use, but the timing is wrong, he said.

"Considering our current economic climate within the state, I don't think we should be talking about taxes," Taussig said. "The timing is not right to put this on the ballot in November."

Snead said $7 million to $9 million of the county projects would also benefit the City Commission and Manhattan residents. He said that makes the County Commission's proposal one the City Commission might decide to agree with.

Commissioners plan to place the sales tax resolution on the November 2002 general election or conduct a special election if the city agrees with the county's proposal.

If residents vote "Yes" on the sales tax, the city will get 56 percent of the money, the county will get 42 percent and smaller towns in Riley County will get 2 percent.

If the commissioners agree to a special election, the county and city will work out an agreement for who gets the money.

"We expect the discussions to continue," Snead said. "This affects everyone and we need to work together." County commissioners left for an out-of-town meeting Thursday and could not be reached for comment.

Smokers targeted by Graves' proposal

Mollie Hull/Collegian

Ross Richter, freshman in open-option, smokes a cigarette while driving his car Sunday. A new proposed tax could raise the price of a pack of cigarettes by 65 cents.

BY SARAH BAHARI

A little more money won't make Daniel Schowengerdt quit smoking.

"It wouldn't affect anything," said Schowengerdt, sophomore in political science and Spanish. "It would have to be a significant increase. Sixty-five cents won't stop people from buying. Schowengerdt, who smokes about three cigarettes a day, doesn't think too many people will be swayed by

Gov. Bill Graves' proposal to increase the state's 24-centper-pack cigarette tax by 65 cents. The increase, which is part of Graves' plan to compensate for the $426 million-budget shortfall, also includes raising the state's sales tax from 4.9 percent to 5.15 percent and increasing the motor fuels tax by I cent. The increases would prevent severe cuts in public education, university budgets and the state's several highway projects by generating $228 million in next The cigarette hike, which state officials think will prompt some smokers to quit, would raise an additional $111 million a year Cigarestes now cost between $3 and $4 a pack. However, Kyle Hare, junior in criminal justice, said many people will want to quit, but most won't. "We've got to be realistic here," said Hare, who smokes a less than a pack a day. "It'd be hard." Amber Laughlin, student coordinator at the Cat's Den at the K-State Student Union, said the store sells 75 to 100 packs a day. She said she doesn't foresee that changing.

"People who smoke are going to smoke regardless," Laughlin said. "They pay 54 now. They keep saying they'll quit, but they keep buying."

But the money has already had its effect on Stephanie Heschmeyer, sophomore in psychology. She quit buying cigarettes two months ago because she couldn't afford the habit.

"If they keep increasing cigarette sales, it's going to decrease the amount of smokers," she said.

Heschmeyer said it's unfair to target one group of

"I don't think it's any of the state's business," she said. "It's not fair to raise just one item. They could raise whatever they think is bad."

Felecia Zeedyk, manager of Texaco Food Mart on Bluemont Avenue, agrees.

When was the last time you saw someone get in their car, light up and kill five people?" she said. "They should be putting that tax on liquor. Not cigarettes.

"It's the lesser of two evils." Zeedyk said it won't affect the store's business. She sells between 300 and 500 packs a day. "We're located right in the heart of Aggieville," she said. "Our No. 2 thing is cigarettes. The first is gas." And while the money might not make Schowengerdt quit, something else could. "I plan on quitting by the end of the year. The health factors are incredible. It's gross, It smells bad," he said. "Thar's something you do on your own, though."

uiet conversations about classes. friends and religion filled the lobby of St. Isidore Catholic Student Center.

A family of four, a husband and wife, a young couple and a handful of college students waited patiently for the walk commemorating Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. to begin.

Beginning at three locations, students and members of the community met Monday evening to participate in a walk and candlelight vigil to honor King and his legacy.

They were there to remember, celebrate and act.

The walk

"Let's go."

With arms linked, the walk began. Leaving St. Isidore, the feeling was one of reflection. Upon departure, Brandon Clark, a member of Alpha Phi Alpha, the fraternity that sponsored the walk, asked participants to walk in silence and think about King and the difference he made in today's world.

To the members of the fraternity, Clark said, King's message is an important one especially since he was one of their fraternity brothers.

"We have to get his message out," Clark said. "The silence of the walk gives you time to reflect on the impact of King's life."

Ending the silence, the three groups from Derby, Kramer and St. Isidore met at the free speech zone behind the K-State Student Union Plaza, also known as the free speech zone. There, the Rev. Don Fallon spoke about the time he met King on the K-State campus, just months before his assas-

Israel takes over town in response to lethal attacks

The Associated Press

TULKAREM, West Bank - Israeli troops searched homes and traded fire with Palestinians as the military took over an entire Palestinian town Monday. This is a first in 16 months of fighting and another blow to beleaguered Palestinian leader

Dozens of tanks rumbled through the streets of Tulkarem, emptied by a military curfew. Troops firing tank-mounted machine guns fought with Palestinian militiamen and rounded up suspected

Two Palestinians were killed and 24 wounded in clashes in Tulkarem and in the West Bank town of Ramallah.

Israel said the seizure was in response to lethal attacks on Israelis and that it was doing the job Arafat failed to do rounding up militants.

Israel hinted that other towns in the northern West Bank might be targeted next. "In the absence of Palestinian Authority security activity, Israel has entered Tulkarem to remove that threat," Israeli government spokesman Dore Gold said.

The Palestinians accused Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon of trying to bring down Arafat and destroy all prospects for a resumption of peace talks.

A defiant Arafat said the Palestinians would resist the Israeli incursion, saying Israel "crossed all the red lines" by taking over Tulkarem.

"Our people will never keep silence about all of these Israeli attacks," he told visitors at his headquarters in the West Bank town of Ramallah, which has been surrounded by Israeli tanks since Friday.

In a rare reference to his own mortality, Arafat also suggested he might not be around to see the establishment of a Palestinian state. "I swear to God I will see the Palestinian state, as a martyr or while still alive." Arafat said. Israel's Cabinet has not formally decided to try to topple Arafat, and government officials have said the latest actions were intended to pressure him to crack down on militants. Israel has raided Palestinian-ruled areas many times since fighting broke out in September 2000. However Monday marked the first time Israel took control of an entire major Palestinian town since Palestinian self-rule began in 1994. Army commanders said troops would stay in Tulkarem for days, not weeks, but Gold said that "we are not putting a time limit on this."

The Tulkarem raid came as a reprisal for a shooting attack last week by a Palestinian militant on a banquet hall in the Israeli town of Hadera. The gunman, who set out from Tulkarem, killed six Israelis before being shot dead by police.

Palestinian militants said they launched the Hadera attack after the death of a militant leader in Tulkarem, which was blamed on Israel.

Tanks rumbled into Tulkarem, a town of about 50,000 Palestinians, at 3 a.m.

"We saw the tanks coming and we ran," said Palestinian policeman Jihad Abu Tawfik, 47.

Consumers should save a considerable amount of money on their gas bills early this year, Kansas Gas Service Community Relations Manager Larry Devine said.

Natural gas prices are expected to decrease 30 to 40 percent within the next few months, Devine said, because of warmer winter temperatures compared to 2001 and an increased gas supply. Last year, the price for natural gas increased dramatically to $8.68 per unit because of a shortage in supply, he said. As of Jan. 7, the price was $5.75 per unit.

"We are predicting that the price will continue to drop," Devine said.

He said the variables affecting the price of gas are more favorable than last winter.

"Last winter had the coldest November and December on record. The cold temperatures caused an awful lot of natural gas to be used early, reducing the supply of natural gas in underground storage," he said.

Hot temperatures in summer 2000 also contributed to the low supply of natural gas, he said. Natural gas that would have been put in storage for winter was used instead to generate more electricity to run air condi-

Another factor in the supply shortage was the inability for gas companies to turn a profit in the natural gas industry because of rig operating costs. The number of rigs from 1998 to 1999 was nearly cut in half to 380 rigs in the field. Fewer rigs accounted for less supply, Devine said.

There are now 765 rigs in the field. producing a larger supply, he said.

As of Jan. 11, the American Gas Association reported that underground storage for natural gas was 77 percent full this year compared to 44 percent last year.

More natural gas in storage will drive prices way down, Devine said. Audrey Craig, senior in interior architecture, said she is happy to hear of the declining price of natural gas, but said she doesn't think

How to lower your gas bill

Natural gas is used to heat, cool, clean, cook and light a home. How much energy used depends on personal habits and lifestyle, the age, condition and how well the home or apartment is insulated and the type and use of home appliances.

More than half the energy used each month is spent on heating and cooling, but if students are more energy conscious, they can be comfortable and still save money.

■ Turn the thermostat down to 58 or 60 degrees when you are away from home for more than a few hours. It will only take a few minutes for the furnace to reheat the home.

Grab an extra blanket for warmth. Students can save $50 to $60 a month just by turning the thermostat down while sleeping

■ Warm air rises. Make sure heating registers are pointed across the floor and are not pointed up. Use a ceiling fan if available to circulate wann air

Install an insulating jacket around your water heater, which will slow down heat loss. The average cost of an insulating jacket is between $10 and Clean the compressor on the back of the refrigerator three to four times a year. Dust on a compressor will cause it to operate less efficiently.

 ■ Turn your computer off overnight. Leaving a 800-watt computer for 12 hours instead of running it 24 hours a day will save about $23 monthly.

Student Senate prepared to debate Union funding

Most of Student Senate's attention this semester will focus on the K-State Student Union's privilege fees, Ryan Walker, vice chair, said.

Senators will study the Union's financial status for four to five weeks this semester, Senate Chair Matt Wolters said, because of a loss in the Union's revenue.

"The Union, especially after renovation, has experienced some challenges in generating revenue, especially in the bookstore," Wolters said.

After the review, the privilege-fee committee will pass two bills concerning Union operations, repair and replacement, Ben Harder, privilege fee committee chair, said.

Last semester, the privilege fee committee allocated more funds to KSDB-FM 91.9, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the Office of Student Activities and Services.

World pledges $2.6 billion to rebuild Afghanistan

TOKYO - The world has so far pledged more than $2.6 billion to rebuild Afghanistan - well short of what the United Nations says is necessary to rebuild a country racked by disaster, war, brutality and depri-

The United States, Japan and Europe promised about $1.3 billion of the aid pledged Monday by participants in an international conference. The money will help Afghanistan do such things as pay the bills of its interim government and clear the country of mines.

Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi, Secretary of State Colin Powell and others addressing the opening session of the two-day conference promised to stand by Afghanistan's poverty-stricken people as they begin reconstruction. Efforts are expected to cost more than $15 billion over the next decade.

"President Bush has made it clear that the United States will not abandon the people of Afghanistan," Powell said after unveiling a U.S. promise of $296 million during the current fiscal year.

But Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill said donors must carefully track the money to make sure it is not squandered through corruption. Hamid Karzai, Afghanistan's interim prime minister, made an emotional plea for help.

"I stand before you today as a citizen of a country that has had nothing but disaster, war, brutality and deprivation against its people for many years," Karzai said.

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Pentagon sent more al-Qaeda and Taliban prisoners to its high-security prison - and some back to Pakistan from Afghanistan - as the Bush administration said it was still sorting out what to do with suspects in the war on terrorism.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld on Sunday defended the idea of trying terrorist suspects by military tribunal and the treatment they are getting in detention.

His statements followed a week of rising international concern over conditions under which prisoners are being held.

Rumsfeld spoke as 34 more detainees were sent to the makeshift U.S. prison at the Guantanamo Bay Naval Base in Cuba, including six Algerians captured in Bosnia. That brings the number in custody there to Thirty other detainees were returned to Pakistan from Afghanistan.

The CIA, FBI and other U.S. agencies have been working to interrogate the thousands of prisoners captured by American troops, Afghan fighters and other allies to decide which have useful intelligence, which might be tried and so on.

Soon-to-be-wed couples find help, fun

BY MAGGIE GRUSZNIS

Falling in love and imagining the perfect wedding day can be easier to dream than plan. Sunday's Manhattan Bridal Show, at the K-State Student Union, helped a roomful of soon-to-be brides and grooms ease the stress of planning their weddings.

The bridal show was sponsored by local wedding vendors who gave away more than $2,000 in gifts and prizes. Brides and grooms registered with the vendors showcasing their services and merchandise, and the winners of the gifts and prizes were announced after a fashion show.

Some couples came only for the gifts and prizes, while others came to find a specific vendor or to see the latest formal-wear styles.

Lucy Worthington, junior in elementary education, attended to get ideas for her wedding. Worthington and her fiance, Travis Berry, a Salina resident, are planning a June 2003 wedding. Even though their wedding date is more than a year away, Worthington said it is never too early to start planning. After all, she said, it will be a very special day.

Worthington and Berry will wed in Salina's Jerry Ivey Park. The park contains a memorial tree and bench for Worthington's deceased father,

Stacy Johnson, freshman in interior design, came to the bridal show with specific goals in mind. Johnson wanted to find a DJ and caterer for her reception, and she also wanted to catch a glimpse of the wedding decorations.

Johnson said planning the wedding has been stressful, but it's also been a lot of fun. By coming to the bridal show, Johnson said she was able to get ideas of what she can do for her wedding. Johnson said she was glad she finally found a DJ.

Johnson and her fiance, Sgt. Michael Zock, will marry June 1. She started planning when Zock proposed on her birthday, Sept. 25. Johnson said she was upset with Zock because she thought he had forgotten about her birthday. She didn't know it then, but she was in for a big surprise.

Later that day, Zock took her to the mall. He suggested the two of them go into Zales Jewelers to look around. Johnson showed Zock an engagement ring she liked. She said that after she showed him the ring. he bought it without hesitation. Then he proposed in the jewelry

"He proposed right in Zales, He got down on his knee and everything," Johnson said.

Before she was able to say "yes" to his proposal, Johnson said she began to cry.

"It was just so unexpected," Johnson said. "I knew we were going to get married some day, but I wasn't expecting him to propose on my graduate, left her flowers and a note. The note's directions lead her to the top of the Manhattan hill where Rothwell was waiting with a candlelit dinner and a candy ring.

"I told her this would be her engagement ring until I could afford a real one," Rothwell said.

Then he told her to close her eyes. Winter said that when she opened her eyes, Rothwell was down on his knee asking her to marry him with a real ring.

Rothwell and Winter are preparing for their wedding on Sept. 1. The couple came to the bridal show to get ideas for their wedding day. Rothwell said he specifically wanted to look at tuxedos.

Most couples came to the bridal show for similar reasons. The Manhattan Bridal Show presented an informative event for the brides and grooms. Manhattan area wedding vendors provided a variety of selections.

"It's been crazy planning my wedding," Johnson said. "I'm glad I came today. I found lots of ideas

Barker, Kauffman focus on Safe Ride program

BY SARAH RICE

Kannas State Collegion

Student Body President Kyle Barker and Vice President Brandon Kauffman have implemented a stop day during finals week and revised the wait-list system, fulfilling two campaign promises.

This semester, they will continue to work on meeting their greatest goal, a Safe Ride program, Barker said.

He said the biggest accomplish. ment of his staff this semester was the formation of a commission that will revise the wait-list system and update the KATS system.

"Overall, we need some sort of uniform(wait-list) procedure for students to understand the different policies," he said.

Another promise fulfilled was the creation of a stop day, which will go into effect in the Spring 2003

The Friday before finals, we wouldn't have class," Kauffman said. We hope this will take some pressure off students." Kauffman said the only disappointment came with the failure to create a week-long freshman orienta-

'It was many factors," he said. "We had somewhat resistance from the administration.

This semester, Barker and Kauffman said they will concentrate on developing a Safe Ride program.

Barker said he and his staff have been researching possibilities and have developed a plan that will mimic other Big 12 schools' systems.

Shayla Dyck, special programs coordinator, has been working on the specifics of the Safe Ride program.

"A local taxicab service would be just catering to K-State students on certain nights of the week," she said. "You would have to show your student ID."

Dyck hopes the program will be up and running by next semester, depending on student reaction.

The challenge now is to find a way to fund the program, which initially will have to come from privilege fees, Barker said.

Kauffman said students would have to vote on the program in March before they would be charged.

"It is a matter of money," he said. "Even though we will only ask for $2 or $3, students see that as an increase and most of them don't want that."

Once the program is launched, Barker said he hopes privilege fees will no longer be necessary.

"We hope it will evolve into a selfsufficient organization that is able to provide its own funding," Barker said. The time has come for the campus community to come together to start a program that will ensure safe transportation, he said. Dyck said she has received full support from the administration. "We have had a positive reaction from the administration," she said. "But there are still a lot of details that we have to work out in order to get it

AIMING TO BE EQUAL

Breaking gender barriers first step in creating balanced roles in society

s a society it is often essential to evaluate our norms and behaviors. Often the most effective way to isolate a problem is to imagine its impact.

If you will, imagine a world where a woman's genitals are, in every sense of the word, chopped off or mutilated at the age of 5 to remove future sexual pleasure.

Imagine a world in which women are not allowed to show anything except their eyes in fear of death.

Imagine a nation in which a woman makes only 70 cents for every dollar a man makes.

Now stop dreaming.

These oppressions are present today throughout the world, from sexual abuse in Africa to economic inequality in the United States.

Thankfully, an increasing amount of people have discovered these alarming practices, but we must face the idea that "modern" society still allows for such abuses to perpetuate. Women, does this bother you? I hope it does. I hope it makes your blood boil. I hope it makes you want to scream at the top of your lungs for everything that is unjust and demand for equal footing.

This is not a privilege. It is a right.

Probably a more important question, however, should be aimed at the opposite gender.

Men, does this upset you?

It fills me with the urge to smash small garden gnomes into tiny pieces in an uncompromising fit of rage. My brethren, I appeal to you to examine the following ideas and embrace the idea that we must work to change this aspect of our society.

We must change because if I were a young child in Africa I would find it disheartening, at best, to be lead into the woods in the wee hours of the morning and watch my testicles get sawed off with a rusty blade.

Yet, we turn an international blind eye to this female equivalent aimed at making women subservient by refusing to take action against such common practices.

We must change, because our sisters, who after the same amount of education as us, statistically will earn only 70 cents for every dollar we earn.

That isn't how I want to get ahead in life. What's the fun of winning a football game if every touchdown you score is worth 10 points, and every one your opponent scores is worth seven?

Additionally, fellow men, I ask you to work for change, because you have respect for each person as an equal human being, regardless of gender.

As a society, we can preach the American ideals and wave around the flag as much as we want. But it's only when we take a stand against these practices, which continue to plague and attack those principles in which our society is founded, that we truly are being American.

Equality in America has long been associated not with the end of a race, but with the starting line. Our culture gives men a gigantic head start in life, and it is only fair to ourselves that we work to eliminate this Understanding this, what can men do to tip the gender scales toward equal? I believe the first step is for everybody to recognize and identify that there are underlying problems that create situations for inequalities to manifest.

This is accomplished mainly through discussion and education. In a democracy, we have the amazing privilege to change those practices we do not like.

If a society deems it will no longer accept certain practices, then a cultural stigma can be established against it.

Thus, we must work with each other to isolate the barriers now in place.

So to you, my alpha-male friends, I beg you to join in with many others that have begun to question the motives behind the rules that society plays by.

I believe most women understand at some level the disadvantages placed on them solely because of their birthright, and I am encouraged by the increasing amount of men that have realized this, too.

Working, talking, and listening together we can strike a note of anticipation for better things to

Thus, this week is a time for all students to remember and reflect. We have ancestors from different parts of the world, but celebrating King is equally imperative for all students.

Imagine life without King or his colleagues. He was the catalyst for a movement that reminds us of who we are: human beings. There are many differences we could use as barriers, but in the end, we are fundamentally similar.

This week is a great time to celebrate King and his ideals - no matter who you

King's dream something everyone should embrace and celebrate daily

ach year, the national holiday celebrating Martin Luther King portrays him as a dreamer of brotherhood who gives us a warm fuzzy feeling.

King did have a vision of 'beloved community," but as William King wrote, he was not the safe, sanitized, one-dimensional civil rights worker best characterized by the "I Have a Dream" speech. The FBI concluded in 1967 that King was a dangerous revolutionary.

King abrasively challenged America's national ideals. Yet those ideals have seen little change since King's death. How then should we celebrate this great leader?

Carl Wendell Himes Jr. wrote that "Dead men make such convenient heroes: they cannot rise to challenge the images we would fashion from their lives. And besides, it is easier to build monuments than to make a better world.

Though King's views on racial reconciliation still need our attention, let us challenge the image of King that is limited to that of a civil rights worker.

I encourage readers to examine King's opinions on other issues. You will find that they are just as relevant today as they were 40 years ago.

On U.S. capitalism: "Something is wrong with capitalism as it now stands in the United States. Power must be relocated; a radical redistribution of power must take place," (to the Ford Foundation in November 1967)

On poverty:

"The dispossessed of this nation .. live in a cruelly unjust society. They must organize a revolution ... against the structures through which the society is refusing to lift ... the load of poverty." (Testament) On the income gap and unrestricted world trade: "A true revolution of values will soon look uneasily on the glaring contrast of poverty and wealth. With righteous indignation, it will look across the seas and see individual capitalists of the West investing huge sums of money in Asia, Africa and South America, only to take the profits out with no concern for the social betterment of the countries, and say: 'This is not just." ("A Time to Break the Silence" Riverside Church in New York, April 4, 1967)

These are not isolated sound bites. Rather, they represent a long and concerted effort by King to coerce America into confronting extensive economic injustice. King met resistance from the northern middle-class when he went to Chicago to protest slum conditions.

Though high-rise tenements in Chicago have been torn down, the problem of poverty still stands. The World Bank reports that worldwide, one in five people are utterly destitute. On peace:

'We come to see that peace is not merely a distant goal that we seek but a means by which we arrive at that goal."

On the futility of violence: "Violence only adds to the chaos ... deepening the brutality of the oppressor ... and increasing the bitterness of the oppressed."

On the federal budget: "A nation that continues year after year to spend more money on military defense than on programs of social uplift is approaching spiritual death." ("A Time to Break the Silence" Riverside Church in New York, April 4, 1967)

King was a wacifist. He was not an idealist isolated from reality in some ivory tower. He intimately understood the practicality of pacifism as a response to a terrorist-like mentality.

King was regularly terrorized by violent intimidation. King saw many fellow civil rights workers murdered by

He remained committed to nonviolence after his home was bombed, threatening his children's lives. He remained committed to non-violence after being beaten numerous times, thrown in jail, and even stabbed in the King believed that violence was wrong. Period. Even if the goal was peace and equality, violence was not only morally wrong, but also an ineffective strategy.

Remembering King without remembering his radical call to economic equality, pacifism and racial reconciliation is a shame.

King's dream for America is a hopeful one, but not one that should give us a warm fuzzy feeling. The FBI understood this when, in a historically documented letter, they attempted to blackmail King into committing suicide (Garrow, "The FBI and Martin Luther

If Americans were to celebrate King's legacy by agreeing with him in a meaningful way, America as we know it would be jeopardized. Readers need not blindly agree with King, but carefully reflect on King's concerns, and consider how your lifestyle will answer his call.

Coalition announces 2002 living wage

BY MICHAEL WATSON

Kansas State Collegian

If Martin Luther King Jr. was afive today, he would be appalled that public funds are not being used to provide living wage jobs for Manhattan families, Flint Hills Living Wage Coalition Chair John Exdell said.

Clergy, union officials and community leaders gathered Monday at the Senior Citizen Center announce the 2002 living wage.

Exdell said the $8.80 hourly living wage, which increased 10 cents from last year, is needed for a single-parent, two-child family to meet its basic needs.

The Coalition announced the age Monday, he said, because of King's support for economic justice.

"Dr. King was a stalwart defender of workers' rights and a strong advocate for living wages," he said. "His support for the striking Memphis sanitation workers, in the weeks before his death, was based on his belief that poverty in a nation as rich as ours was a moral evil, an intolerable justice for a nation as wealthy as ours.'

The Coalition believes the city of Manhattan should guarantee a living wage for its own employees and for the employees of firms that it subsidizes with public tax dollars.

While the Chamber of Commerce urges the City Commission to place a sales-tax referendum on the November ballot td be used for job creation, he said the Coalition will energetically oppose any sales tax for jobs unless the city has first established, by ordinance or policy, that taxpayer subsidies will support only livingwage jobs.

"I won't say it's happening now, but there have been publications that report that businesses come to Manhattan because of low wages," said Walt Ricklefs, organizer of Local Union 1290.

Ricklefs said new businesses that come to Manhattan to utilize lowincome labor do not help the fight for living wages.

Exdell said living wages are needed to support families in the Manhattan community. He said there is clear evidence that wages in Manhattan are not keeping up with the real needs of low-income families

In 2000, the Manhattan Emergency Shelter served 428 individuals. In 2001, the shelter serviced 515 individuals, a 20percent increase, Exdell said.

At Thanksgiving, the Flint Hills Breadbasket served 2,439 holiday dinners, he said, most with families with at least one employed adult.

"These figures show clearly that Manhattan needs more jobs that pay good wages," Exdell said. "From all indications, there are thousands in our community who do not earn enough to pay their bills and enjoy a decent quality of life. They are poor because they are paid poorly."

The Reverend Larry Fry said Manhattan is a wonderful community, but there are people who are out on the edge of being able to make it on their current wages.

"A living wage would give people dignity," Fry said. "What a day it would be if we didn't have to deliver a Thanksgiving turkey or deliver a fruit basket.

"I support the idea of using public money being given to guarantee living wages."

The Coalition will continue to fight for living wages, Exdell said. The Coalition will urge the City Commission to place a living-wage study in its 2003 budget.

He said the study will help the Commission see how much living wages will help Manhattan citizens. Ricklefs said workers have been

K-State-Salina offers new business program

BY SHANNON HARTENSTEIN Kansus State Collegian

Students are getting down to business this spring with a new associate's degree offered at K-State-Salina.

About 50 students enrolled in a program to obtain an associate of science in applied business degree, which will focus on basic business, accounting and management skills. The Kansas Board of Regents approved the degree in October. It will replace the associate's degree in business formerly offered at Fort Riley by the College of Business Administration.

"For a long time, we've been wanting a degree to capture the undecided students," said Debra Marsh, academic achievement center coordinator for K-State-Salina academic services.

"It allows us to tap into a new population that we haven't been able to serve before," she said. "We have 200 to 300 students that are just here taking classes but would like to stay here and get their degree. They want to get something out of their time here."

That's exactly what Bryan Hinnen had in mind. Hinne, a junior in applied business, will be the first graduate of the program

"I want to take something from this campus when I leave," he said. "I think the degree will be a major success. A lot of the students here are pretty unsure about going to a bigger university. This allows them to get something while they're here.

Semesters before the program was approved, Hinnen was already working with advisers to schedule classes that would satisfy the associate's degree requirements. K-State-Salina already offered the required courses, making it easy for current students to enter the program with some requirements already completed.

Degree requirements also include courses which satisfy requirements for the business administration pre-professional program at K-State, making it feasible for students to continue their education.

For some students, the associate's degree will provide the foundation for completing a bachelor's degree. Hinnen plans to use the skills he's learned in the applied business degree to pursue a bachelor's degree in hotel administration at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

"It's easy for students to go on to finish their degree in business at Manhattan, whether it's in accounting, finance or business," said Nancy Mosier, associate dean of the College of Technology and Aviation at K-State-Salina.

Even with only the associate's degree, graduates will have better employment opportunities, Mosier said. Some area businesses require employees to have associate degrees in business to enter their management training programs, she said. The degree allows students to pursue positions that are unattainable without adequate education.

Marsh agreed.

"It allows students to market themselves," Marsh said. "I can see it becoming one of our most popular options."

BY DEREK BOSS

K-State did earn its first Big 12 win Saturday, but the team has little time to savor it. The Wildcats (7-8, 1-3), fresh off a 63-52 victory over tackle Colorado in Boulder.

"Every team needs to taste a little bit of it at least." Coach Jim Wooldridge said after the win. "They were some happy guys in the locker room after the game, and hopefully that will generate some renewed enthusiasm and confidence going into next week.

'We've got a quick turnaround going to Colorado, so we don't have a lot of time to pat ourselves on the back. We have to move on."

And move on quickly.

With little practice time between the Iowa State and ts, the Cats will face the No. 2 scoring offense it the Big 12 tonight. The Buffaloes average 82,2 points per game and have scored 90+ four times this season.

Colorado also has four players posting double figure scoring, topped by David Harrison at a 13.5-ppg clip. But K State showed what kind of defensive team it is

The Cats held lowa State, the second-best shooting team in the league (46.9 percent), to 34.9 percent from the floor. The Cyclones' 52 points for the contest was also their lowest offensive output of the season.

"We're just a scrappy team," guard Larry Reid said. "We were aware of everything they were doing, and we were just down trying to get loose balls, get on the boards and

That scrappy play has K-State ranked atop the league shoot just 38.3 percent from the floor.

Against the Cowgirls, though, the only thing the Cats could get to drop were tears after their 60-68 loss.

"They came out really, really aggressive on us." Ohlde said. "They had a lot of pressure on our ball handlers, and they were really physical down in the post. Overall, they came out more aggressive

Most noticeably, OSU held Koehn to just eight points. But stopping the freshman three-point threat wasn't the Cowgirls' main priority.

"I don't think that stopping her will beat K-State," OSU coach Dick Hafterman said. "What you do is you limit the top three kids of Ohlde. Koehn and Wecker - they average 55 and they get 31, so I think if you hold those three to 31 you have a chance to win the ball game.

"If they score 55, I don't think you beat them - so I think it is all three and not just one.

Despite having their top scorers clamped and turning the ball over 19 times, the Cats still managed to make two more field goals than the Cowgirls and the same number of three-point shots. Ohlde still scored 17 points, and senior guard Kristin Rethman picked up for a quiet Koehn by hitting five treys for 15 points.

The difference in the game, though, was at the free-throw line. OSU shot 18 more free throws than K-State and converted those into 12 points compared to four for the Cats.

"They were coming at us more than we were going at them," Rethman said. "They really attacked the basket, and we didn't." That lack of aggressiveness summed up the entire game for Coach Deb Patterson.

"We never had that personality tonight where we took it to the next level. Oklahoma State played aggressive in situations where the game got close and we played passive," she said. "I thought we

STILLWATER, Okla. — K-State has ridden the backs of its young players so far this season to overwhelming success, but this time it came back to haunt them. Redshirt freshman Laurie Koehn, who led the Cats in scoring prior to the game, was held to just eight points in the Cats' 68-60 loss to Oklahoma State over the weekend.

It was Koehn's second-lowest output of the season, the result of what Cowgirl coach

Dick Halterman said was the main focus during his team's preparations for K-State. Koehn, who was averaging 18.8 points per game on 47-percent shooting, was kept in check by Cowgirls' guard Chantoya Hawkins. Both played the entire 40 minutes, but it was Hawkins who stole the spotlight, tallying 18 points while keeping Koehn out of her system all day.

Bramlage to reach capacity for two of next three games

Two of K-State's next three home games have been sold out, associate athletic director for internal operations Casey Scott announced Sunday.

The K-State Ticket Office at Bramlage Coliseum still has close to 5,000 tickets available for Wednesday night's contest against Kansas, but the Cats' game against Texas Tech on Sunday, Jan. 27 and the Feb. 2 game with Iowa State are sold out.

Sunday's announcement marked the second and third time K-State has sold out Bramlage Coliseum this season after 13,466 fans watched the Wildcats beat Nebraska, 85-71 on Jan. 9.

Athletic department releases revamped student ticket policy

In light of the success of K-State's women's basketball team this season, a new student ticket policy has been developed.

The revamped plan allows for 1,300 free general admission tickets for students. Any remaining students wishing to attend the game may due so for $2 after displaying a K-State student ID.

Tickets will be available beginning one, hour prior to each women's game at Bramlage.

"We are so excited about the success of the women's basketball team, and it's great to see the kind of environment that has developed in Bramlage Coliseum," Kyle Barker, student body president, said.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics worked with SGA to approve the proposition.

Austra Skujyte led the K-State women's track team to victory with her record-setting performance in the Wildcat Invitational at Ahearn Field House on Saturday and Sunday.

Skujyte destroyed the former NCAA women's pentathlon record by winning four of the five events, and placed second behind teammate Carmen Write in the fifth event. Accumulating 4,425 points, Skujyte earned 124 more points than she needed to break the record.

"Austra was exceptional," Coach Cliff Rovelto said. "What she is doing is phenomenal."

Rovelto said Skujyte is far from finished.

"We know what she is capable of," Rovelto said. "To the people who just see her scores, it is very impressive, but those of us that see her every day know that she can score even higher."

Skujyte looked impressive again Sunday, placing second in the shot put behind K-State's Rebekah Green. The women's throws automatically qualified both to compete at the NCAA Championship meet, March

K-State was able to use the momentum garnered from its four victories to carry them to a second place finish.

The Cats finished with 161 points, 31 behind Nebraska.

Rovelto was happy with the way all of his athletes responded after what he viewed as a poor showing in the Cats' last outing at the KSU Invitational on Jan. 11.

Cyclone turnovers in the first five minutes. ISU could only muster one field goal in the first 10 and a half minutes of play, allowing the purple to build a 15-5 advantage.

Matt Siebrandt's 10 points led the Cats in the first half, and a Larry Reid three-pointer with three seconds left gave K-State a 30-23 halftime edge.

"Big, big, big," Wooldridge said of Reid's timely trey. "But he's done that several games as you recall in the history of him playing here."

Reid found center Pervis Pasco on a monstrous alley-oop to start the second half. Pasco was fouled and completed the three-point play to push the lead to 10. That lead would stay in double figures for all but 3:27 of the period.

"That was a big lift," Reid said of Pasco's dunk. "It was a little momentum builder and kind of set them back."

Reid finished with a game-high 18 points, while Nick Williams (11), Siebrandt (10) and Pasco (10) also notched double figures.

K-State's near-70 percent freethrow shooting also helped out, considering 45 fouls were called in the game. In the second half alone, the two teams shot 47 free throws and attempted just 52 field goals.

The positives were much harder to find for the Cyclones. Two of their top scorers, Jake Sullivan and Shane Power, were held to a combined 4-of-19 shooting on the day, and the team committed 19 turnovers.

Siebrandt said it was the type of effort K-State needed heading into

"That will be something we can look at on film and learn from," Rethman said, "learn to build on a lead and keep getting stops and then execute on offense on the other end."

On a positive note for K-State, of the announced attendance of 2,255, fans clad in purple outnumbered those in orange at the game.

Unfortunately for the Cats, they could not give the fans a win.

"You just have so much emotion when you see those folks supporting our program like that and making this long drive," Patterson said. "It's such a crushing disappointment to know we sent them home disappointed. It just pierces you because you do appreciate that kind of following."

"I thought she guarded Koehn as well as you can guard her." Halterman said.

"Our game plan was to always have a hand in her face behind the three-point line because she is such a great shooter," Hawkins said. "We wanted to make her put it on the floor and try to beat us on the drive because they live on the three.'

Hawkins completed her mission.

Koehn made just one three-point shot on the night. Prior to the contest with Oklahoma State. the second-year guard was leading the nation in three-pointers made.

Hawkins and the Cowgirls set an aggressive tone on the perimeter early. Going into the half, the Wildcats had turned the ball over 11 times and Koehn had not yet made a shot.

It was the first time this season Koehn had posted zero points by the intermission. Not only was Koehn 0-for-4 from the field, but Hawkins' pressure had also forced two Koehn turnovers.

Despite her poor first half, though, Coach Deb Patterson said she wasn't concerned. Since the Cats had clawed their way to even by halftime, Patterson said it was just a matter of playing K-State's game in the second half

"We tried to vary our looks a little bit, but we didn't have any

Couple commits $3 million to K-State

BY EDIE HALL

Kansas State Collegian

At the age of 81, Joseph Barton-Dobenin is living a life that some K-State faculty members have called extraordinary. Barton-Dobenin and his wife, Elizabeth, made a commitment Jan. 9 to give the K-State Foundation $3 million.

The funds will expand the Czech Republic exchange program the couple helped establish in the early 1990s. The money will also go toward faculty exchanges and an international chair. It will bring Czech music, theater, dance and literature to the K-State campus.

, William Richter, associate provost for international programs, said university officials spoke with the couple for several years regarding this type of cift.

"I feel very good that this has been finalized," Richter said. "I think it represents a great honor for K-State, and a great opportunity to continue building relations between American and Czech students."

' Joseph Barton-Dobenin, a Prague native, fled his country of Czechoslovakia and went to Paris when a communist regime overtook the country in 1948. Land owned by Barton-Dobenin's family, including a castle his grandfather had purchased in the early 1900s, was taken from them.

. "When I left my home, I was convicted by feelings of knowing I'd never be able to go back and that my land would never be returned to me," Barton-Dobenin said. "After some time, I realized that if I was to be happy, I couldn't hang onto those dreams and feelings. I had to start from scratch and gain my place in the world."

After living in Paris and Tunisia, Barton-Dobenin came to the United States. He did not speak English when he arrived, but he earned a bachelor's degree from the University of Nebraska in 1957 and a master's in business in 1958.

He then taught business classes in the College of Agriculture at K-State.

In 1985, Barton-Dobenin retired and the couple remained in the Manhattan area. He had taught for 27 years, taking a break only to get his doctoral degree from the University of Nebraska in 1966.

As the couple was settling into retirement, an exciting thing happened. In 1989, the Berlin wall came down, and the communist regime in Czechoslovakia fell. The Czech Republic government passed a law returning property to its rightful owners. The Barton-Dobenin family regained their wealth, land and castle.

"It was like a tremendous new world was opened up to me," Barton-Dobenin said. "It was a shock to me. After years of convincing myself that it was something that was an unreal possibility, it really seemed like something that came from the sky." Richter said the way the couple shares their wealth with many American and Czech students is very thoughtful. One way they did this was by setting up scholarship programs.

The Czech Republic study abroad program was set up in 1991 by K-State mathematics professor, George Strecker. The original exchange program was between K-State and Charles University. Czech Technical University and Czech Agricultural University were later added to the program.

The first students exchanged colleges in 1994. Barry Michie, the director of the study abroad program, said the Czech program didn't take off until 1996 and 1997, when the couple set up two scholarships to help students from both countries.

The Joseph and Elizabeth Barton-Dobenin International Exchange Scholarship provides a total of $5,000 for U.S. students, and $7,500 for Czech students coming to K-State. Their other scholarship, the Joseph and Elizabeth Barton-Dobenin Fellowship in Business, demonstrates the couple's concern for the international education of business students.

Richter said he believes the couple plays a major role in the success of the program with their funding and hospitality.

"They have sort-of adopted the participants in this program as children," Richter said. "They enjoy having them over to their house, and visit the students in Prague when they are there."

GONGFARMER

Randy Regler, creator of The Gongfarmer, is calling it quits after 11 years of drawing the cartoon.

Local cartoonist quits to pursue personal goals

BY JJ DUNCAN

he gong is tolling, and Randy Regier is stepping off the stage ... but not completely.

Friday, Jan. 18, after three years of daily comics, the words "The End" appeared on the final strip of "The Gongfarmer." The strip has been picked up by the Knight-Ridder Tribune syndicate chain and is printed in various papers throughout the country, including the University of Kansas' Daily Kansan. With things going so well, why is he quitting?

At the age of 37, Regier, senior in sculpture, has decided the popular strip should end so he has more time to focus on sculpture, school and his family. Regier said he is afraid of letting down fans, but they can still see his work in his new single-panel comic, running every Wednesday, "The Gongfarmer Travelogue" in the Collegian.

Surrounded by his sculpture work, as well as piles of "Gongfarmer" ideas and sketches, Regier is at home in his quiet drawing room.

Next to him are his first installment of his new comic, and a large empty can of "Ol' Bastard Groped Turnips" filled with art supplies he created for a class. So, the first question that comes to mind is why would someone who has been encountering such increasing success with "The Gongfarmer" want to quit?

Randy: I'm quitting because, for one, the comic strip is not going to make a living for me, although it's not about the money.

"Gongfarmer" is the kind of thing that makes syndicate editors uneasy when they think about trying to sell it to family papers. I use dialogue and subject matter that's just not gonna fly. It's going to be offensive to too large a percentage for them to take a gamble on it. The future of "The Gongfarmer" as it is, is limited to college papers. Although I don't have any problem with that, I see a much stronger future, as far as supporting my family, with my sculpture.

Between driving 100 miles a day, doing a daily comic strip, creating my sculpture and being a decent husband and father, something had to give, and the comic strip was the only thing I felt I could let go. It's so labor intensive that something had to go, and I couldn't cut out anything else, but it was probably one of the hardest decisions I've ever made.

JJ: Have you enjoyed doing it? Yeah. Obviously it's a discipline and the last couple semesters I've gotten up at 4:30 or 5 in the morning to do it during the school week and on weekends.

At the same time, it's like food. I couldn't not do it. I couldn't let it go. It's not obsessive, but I so strongly identified with being a cartoonist doing this strip that it wasn't something I felt I could ever let go. Hence the desire to do the "Travelogue," just so I could keep hold of the end of the rope. Right now, there's just too many things going on to do everything well, and I really strongly, candidly, feel that the quality of the comic strip was in jeopardy because I was trying to do so many different things, and do them all wel

Were you happy with the quality of the strip last semester? No, not particularly. Occasionally I was, but not overall. I've always wanted "The Gongfarmer" to be something very different from other comic strips, and I felt it was becoming very much like other comic strips.

When did you first start doing comics? It was almost an overnight thing. I was working as a body man at a Buick/GMC dealership in Oregon, where I grew up. I was creatively starved. I was really desperate to do something with my mind, and literally on a whim, I was going through the community college paper. and there was a guy teaching a cartooning class.

I signed up, and from the very first night, I fell absolutely head over heels in love with it. I couldn't draw my way out of a wet paper bag, but it was one of those rare occasions that I wanted it so bad that I just stuck with it.

Then, what became so intensely important about "The Gongfarmer" was that it seemed like my ticket out of the body-shop business. So I hung all my hopes and dreams on the hope that someday this strip would become nationally syndicated, and it would be my escape. That seems less and less the case now, especially with my sculpture. I don't see it as my salvation anymore. And now that I can let that intensity go a little bit, it allows me to backtrack and draw more just for the sheer delight of it.

What will you miss about it? I don't know that I'll miss it so much as I have a fear that I might be letting some people down. I know what it's like to read a comic strip and look forward to that and have it there. I really fear that in some way or another I'm letting people down that really enjoy reading the strip. And if that's the case, I sincerely apologize for

You said you know how that feels. What do you mean?

I felt that way, and in no way do I compare myself to "The Far Side" or "Calvin and Hobbes," I'm not in that league, but I felt that way when both those strips quit. When they were gone, I essentially stopped reading the comic pages and haven't read them since.

Were those influences on you? Sure, everything's an influence. I'm influenced by the strips I hate to do better, and I'm influenced by the strips I love to

What has inspired you in cartooning? Well in a way it's my lithium, it's my opiate, and my knight in shining armor. I thought it would help get me out of a rough 15-year stretch of working pretty brutal jobs. I lived for it because, as a person who places a very high value on creativity, it was the one thing that kept that spark alive.

What about cartoonists? If I had to mention cartoonists who have been incredibly influential to me, there would be one that very few people have heard of, B. Kliban. He did these bizarre little single-panel books, and he was so far from being nationally syndicatable that there was no hope in hell that he would ever be a marketable item, which is one of the things that I really respected about him. I absolutely love his stuff.

Why do you want to do the "Travelogue" now? The only thing that hinders the "Travelogue" is the border of the cartoon. The four lines on the edges. The fact that I can create other countries and cities and planets and worlds.

One of the things that really had something to do with the end of the "Gongfarmer" was that I had painted myself into a corner. There was no explanation as to why maybe Aesop and Flloyd were on another planet without having two weeks explaining how they built the ship and got there.

If I thought about some incredibly bizarre scenario I had to somehow introduce it, explain it and sum it up by the end of the week. I felt that obligation because the strip had become that.

That's what's so delightful about "Gongfarmer Traverlogue." I don't owe anyone an explanation. If they get it, they get it, and if they don't, they don't, but I'm not going to offer an explanation. There's a core group of people out there, a very small group, that delight in things that are

Students have until Friday to enroll on KATS.

Following the first week of classes, students must seek instructor or dean approval in order to add classes. Thursday is the last day students can add classes without permission from class instructors.

"It's important that students be aware of these upcoming dates," Associate Registrar Gunile DeVault said. "Students should look at their handbooks to check these dates."

DeVault said the system is not set up for use after Friday. After Friday, students must go to their academic deans' offices to fill out drop/add forms.

Students also have the option to drop classes. Feb. 21 is the last day to drop a course without a withdrawal being recorded on a student's transcript.

DeVault said there might be a negative effect on financial aid opportunities if a withdrawal

"It depends on who is looking at a transcript and for what purpose it is being used," DeVault said. "Sometimes an employer may not even know what withdrawal means.

Curt Cooper, freshman in preprofessional construction science and management, said he wanted to drop a class last semester, but waited too long. He said he wasn't able to drop his class because dropping it would have affected his scholarship and financial aid.

"I had to stick with the class because I would not be a full-time student, and I would have a withdrawal on my transcript," Cooper said.

Students should take note of the refund policy for dropping classes. Friday is the last day for a 100 percent refund. The refund drops to 90 percent between Jan. 28 to Feb. 1, and Feb. 15 is the last day to withdraw with a 50 percent bizarre and whimsical. Those are the people who I build the strongest kinship with, and they're not the mass audience. I fully understand that they will be in the minority, which goes against the grain of syndicate thinking.

How are you going to take it when you see a comment in "The Fourum" where people are asking 'what the hell is this new comic?"

Oh, excellent. That would feel great. If it elicits any response at all then that's tremendous. It doesn't matter to me what the response is. I don't expect people to like it. I don't mean that callously, though.

Going back to "The Gongfarmer," where did the characters come from?

They're all facets of my personality. I've done a little bit of reading about dreams, and it seems that in dreams, the people in your dreams represent different parts of your personality. I'm not sure if that's the case, but all the "The Gongfarmer" characters are facets of my own personality.

The only one that I would say might be outside of that, in part, is Vic Gomese, who is based on Vicente Gomese, who was my Spanish teacher. He showed up in Spanish I straight from Spain, shirt unbuttoned to the navel, hairy chest, big hair and a great sense of humor. In some ways he really played up the stereotypical Spaniard ladies' man thing.

So I introduced him in one strip just to give him some crap when I was in his class, and it was supposed to kind of embarrass him, and he just ate it up. Some students mentioned how much they liked that character, and he became a vital part of that strip. So it's half him, but still in many ways it's my personality, too. They all

Who is most like you in the strip? It would have to be Aesop because he's messed up, but he's compas-

He's in the strip, but at the same time, he's an observer, and so much of it doesn't make sense to him. He has no choice but to be there.

I feel that way probably six days out of seven. It really wasn't my choice to be here, and I'm not willing to take the option to get out. So in the meantime, I'm trying to make sense out of what's going on. A lot doesn't make sense to me, and that's exactly how I perceive Aesop.

Tell me about your reaction in the comic to Sept. 11.

I didn't want to address that. I didn't trust my initial reaction. It wasn't the same as the majority of the national reaction I was hearing.

I didn't want to react too quickly and regret it later because when you put something in print, you can't take it back.

I sat around for three or four days. and I couldn't draw anything at all, and I realized that until I dealt with it I couldn't possibly draw the strip again. So I dealt with it in the most gentle manner I could and still slip in my personal bias towards how I felt.

That was very tough. I didn't want the strip to be something that was a constant knee-jerk reaction to political events. But that was one time I felt like I just couldn't step around it. I couldn't possibly do another strip about the chicken almost getting laid with that whole thing going on.

Your reaction wasn't the compulsorily patriotic stance that many people seemed to take.

I really don't want any part of any nationalistic fervor that becomes the latest fashion and the latest fad. I felt very strongly that that was the case, and I was very concerned.

I know that that's an easy reaction to being deeply wounded. The people were looking for something, but it's just so dangerous to go down that path. To me, all human lives are of equal value, and I couldn't give a crap what nationality that life is associated with. They're all of absolutely equal value. Borders are lines on maps, and not reasons for war.

So what are you going to be focusing your time on now?

I'm working on something right now that requires all of my attention and all of my abilities as a sculptor. Lateron this semester it will explain why I had to drop the strip. It will be entirely obvious why I had to work on this project. Until then, I can't say anymore about it.

Anything you'd like to add? I'm deeply appreciative of all the people who read the strip. I have the deepest gratitude for everyone. I think that will still be evident in my

her energy costs are too high for a four-person house.

Craig said she and her three roommates pay about $300 for natural gas each month. They conserve energy well, she said, so the gas bills are reasonable.

"The thermostat is set at about 73 degrees right now," she said. "It's a big house with lots of windows. We have to keep the temperature high because of poor insulation. There is a draft."

Devine said poor insulation and infiltrating air is one thing that will drive up a monthly bill. He said he has heard that all of the cracks in a home would add up to the equivalent of a three-foot square hole, which would make it difficult to heat your home.

He said there are many things students can do to reduce the cost of using energy. In a house that has a lot of draft, weather stripping or caulking around windows will reduce air infiltration.

"It may not save you a whole lot, but it all adds up," he said.

VIGIL

The vigil

The seats of All Faiths Chapel were nearly filled.

"I see so much support from different ethnicities and races," said Orion Carrington, coordinator for the walk and vigil. "That is not often seen on campus."

Black, white, Hispanic and Asian faces filled the chapel. In his sermon about King and his life, the Rev. Darryl Martin of the Manhattan Christian Fellowship Church said differences are what brings a nation together.

"We must remember that despite our differences, we were created in God's image and likeness," Martin said. "We have a tendency to think that this is a black holiday. We have to remember that this is an American holiday, and Martin Luther King Jr. was an American who just happened to be black."

With "Amens" echoing off the chapel walls, Martin reminded the audience the causes King worked

"Who will be the next to carry the torch?" Martin said.

After several choir selections and a dedicational candle lighting, a prayer led by Fallon concluded the event. For many, though, the event was just a starting point for a week of celebration and action to honor King.

"We have to pay homage to the things we take advantage of," Carrington said. "This is an opportunity for everyone to remember how things were. When we do that, it is easier to support how things are."

Noble Roman's pizza proved that it has all the right ingredients for success after its most successful grand opening in the K-State Student Union.

pizzas during its grand opening Thursday. At its first location in Kansas, Noble Roman's offers a variety of pizza, breadsticks, hot sandwiches and pasta.

"The pizza is pretty good," said Lance Albertson, senior in agriculture technology management. "I think it adds more variety and more choices to the Food Court."

Located next to Sandwich Central in the Union Food Court, Noble Roman's replaced Call Hall Ice Cream.

"We try to offer every type of food in the food court," said Bernard Pitts, Union executive director. "Noble Roman's gives you another option. Pizza is fairly stable in student diets. We also hope it will encourage off-campus consumers to visit the Union."

Union."
The Union houses one of more than 950

Noble Roman's restaurants in 42 states and six foreign countries. The midwest-based company serves more than 75 college campuses nationwide and operates restaurants on military bases and in convenience stores, in addition to freestanding restaurants.

"Noble Roman's is interested in providing good, quality, freshly-made pizza," said Eric Braun, director of dining services. "It's an old-fashioned style pizza. They have an old world-tasting sauce with a hint of sweetness, and it's homemade. They also have a hand-made, hand-tossed crust."

One of the most enticing features for students is a value meal, Braun said. The $4.49 meal includes a 7-inch individual pizza, a half order of breadsticks with a choice of dipping sauces and a 24-ounce soft drink.

"Students can get a lot food for a reasonable price," Braun said. "Students on a budget can really stock up."

Student organizations may also benefit,

"Many student groups utilize the Union for meetings," Braun said. "We hope to be able to offer an on-campus option for pizza for their events."

In addition to Food Court service, Noble Roman's will offer on-campus delivery by late spring. Delivery will be during limited

Alumni Center construction on schedule for fall completion

BY JAMIE BARRETT

lunsas State Collegian

Keeping K-State history as its framework, the K-State Alumni Center is on schedule with its construction at the south side of Memorial Stadium.

Construction of the center began March 2001, and architects and center committee members projected the completion date of the center for fall 2002, said Amy Renz, president of the Alumni Association.

"Weather has been on our side," Renz said. "Typically, a project like this does not stay on schedule, but we are right on track."

Renz said the building process should be completed sometime in August, allowing offices and employees to move in later that month. But the dedication of the building won't be until Oct. 19.

"The official ribbon cutting is what will end the project," Renz said. "We will open up the building to the campus and the community as a kind of open house. We will be playing Texas that weekend in football, so there should be plenty of people there for the event."

The current Alumni Association offices are located on the third floor of the KSU Foundation building. With the building of the new center, Renz said Alumni Association members are anxious to be back on campus after 11 years

"We came to the Foundation building in 1991," Renz said. "Before that we were located at the Hollis House, next to campus. Being away, we haven't had as much contact with the students and the university. We are looking forward to being back on campus."

The center, which will be 60 percent public space, will include banquet rooms, conference space, a library and a Wildcat Den, which will be available for both alumni and student use, Renz said.

"We want people to come in and use the center," Renz said. "Students are welcome to come by and use this space."

When plans for the new Alumni Center came about, the center committee was told that it would take five years just to raise the money for the building. In just three years, 90 percent of the money was raised, Renz said, completely due to private donations.

"We are basically two years ahead of our plan," Renz said. "The success of this project has been because of all the K-State alumni working together so well."

Renz said everyone from committee organizers to the architects who drew up the plans for the building have been K-State students.

"It was important for us to have the building designed and built by K-Staters," Renz said. "All the people that have been involved have worked together so well."

Curt Frasier, alumni center chair, said the building process has been a success at every level.

"The best part of my involvement has been the opportunity to work with other K-Staters who love the university in developing a long term asset for K-State," Frasier said. "Our staff is excellent and has made the entire process easy and enjoyable."

For Alumni Association members, having a place to call their own on campus is important, Frasier said.

"We are looking forward to sharing the center with other alumni, friends, faculty and students, and seeing the excitement in their eyes as they first experience their new home."

Renz said making the center a home for students, as well as alumni, is a vital part of their vision.

"There are two sides to our job — the students and the alumni," Renz said. "Students will hopefully be members someday. We have the number one alumni association in the Big 12 and we want the center to be an avenue that appeals to students after their graduation."

All Kmart stores will stay open

BY ALEXANDRA R. MOSES

The Associated Press

DETROIT — Kmart Corp., known for its BlueLight Special and discount prices, filed for bankruptcy protection Tuesday, becoming the largest retailer to seek shelter from creditors under Chapter 11.

The nation's No. 3 discount retailer has struggled in the fiercely competitive discount market, and debt rating agencies, including Standard & Poor's, have in recent weeks lowered their credit ratings.

The move comes a day after food distributor, Fleming Cos, said it had cut off most shipments to Kmart because the discounter failed to make its regular weekly payment for deliveries. Fleming said Kmart, its largest customer, owed $78 million.

The filing was made in U.S.
Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Illinois, in Chicago.

"I don't think there's any surprise here," said Wayne Hood, with Prudential Securities Inc. Hood said Kmart has to restructure its debt, close unproductive stores and streamline at the corporate level.

But in its release Tuesday, the company said all 2,114 Kmart stores would remain open.

At a Kmart in Greenville, Mich., Carl Rittersdorf said he would feel bad if it closed. He and four friends meet for breakfast at the cafeteria there every Tuesday.

Shooting in India kills 4, wounds 20

BY SUJOY DHAR
The Associated Press

CALCUTTA, India — Indian officials said Tuesday an Islamic militant group based in Pakistan claimed responsibility for an attack at a U.S. cultural center in Calcutta. Four Indian policemen were killed and 20 others were wounded.

Both Pakistan and a representative of the group disputed India's claim, and American officials played down suggestions the attack was terrorism directed at the United States.

Since a deadly attack on Parliament in New Delhi on Dec. 13, both India and Pakistan have massed troops at their border. Pakistan offered Tuesday to ease its war footing if India first starts moving soldiers away from the border, but there was no immediate response from New Delhi. Indian officials also blamed the attack on Pakistan-based militants.

The rivals have fought two wars over the divided province of Kashmir, which both claim in its entirety. India accuses Pakistan of supporting Islamic militants fighting for independence in the province. Islamabad denies it, and accuses mainly Hindu India of oppressing Muslims in Kashmir.

At about 6:30 a.m. Tuesday, four gunnen on motorcycles drove up to the U.S. government cultural center in Calcutta and opened fire, killing four police officers and wounding 18 officers, a pedestrian and a private security guard, state Home Secretary Amit Kiran Deb said. No Americans were hurt. The assailants fled.

The American Center houses a library, the embassy's public affairs office, a press section and a wing for cultural programs. The center was closed Tuesday. Spent AK-47 bullets littered the street, which was guarded by hundreds of police.

India's home minister, Lal Krishna Advani, called the shooting a terrorist

STATE IN BRIEF

Holiday hiring helps drop state unemployment rate

TOPEKA — Holiday hiring helped push Kansas' unemployment rate down in December, but the effects of the slowing economy will likely raise the jobless rate next month, state officials said.

December unemployment stood at 3.7 percent, down from 4 percent in November, the state Department of Human Resources reported Tuesday. Nationally, December's unemployment rate was 5.8 percent.

Bill Layes, chief of labor market information, said December unemployment has fallen from November's rate in 18 of the past 20 years.

December's figures did not reflect the hundreds of layoffs planned by Kansas manufacturers and the airline industry, said Richard Beyer Human Resources Secretary.

Laves said January probably will bring a rather sharp increase in unemployment as temporary holiday workers are shed and the string of manufacturing layoffs begin to

Palestinian gunman opens fire at bus stop, wounds 8

JERUSALEM — A Palestmian gunman opened fire on Israelis waiting at a bus stop in the heart of Jerusalem on Tuesday, wounding eight people. Hours later, Israeli commandos stormed an explosives lab and killed four Islamic militants in the West Bank. The violence provoked outrage and warnings of retaliation on both sides.

Mideast tensions are again surging after several weeks of relative calm, with the Israelis effectively keeping Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat under house arrest at his West Bank government compound, and militant Palestinians abandoning an informal truce.

The Israelis said they launched Tuesday's commando raid in the West Bank city of Nablus and other preemptive operations because Arafat repeatedly refused to act against militants. They also held Arafat responsible for the shooting attack on one of west Jerusalem's busiest

ATTACK DEVELOPMENTS

- Interim Afghanistan leader Hamid Karzal left a two-day conference on rebuilding the war-torn nation with $4.5 billion in international aid pledges.
- A man was arrested in the southern Philippines for allegedly belonging to an al-Qaeda-linked group accused of plotting terror attacks in Southeast
- The number of detainees at the Guantanamo base in remote Cuba rose to 158 with Monday's arrival of 14 battle-scarred fighters on stretchers, including two amputees and three with infections requiring surgery.

Health drink to hit national market soon; City Commission approves MACC funds

Kansas State Collegian

Starting and expanding technology-based, high growth enterprises is the best way to create jobs, Commissioner Roger Reitz said at Tuesday's City Commission meeting.

Mid-America Commercialization Corp. requested $75,000 to fund clients like Nanoscale Materials, Inc., a technology-based product marketing company, and NutriJoy, Inc., a company marketing nutritious beverages. MACC is a not-for profit corporation formed to facilitate the commercialization of technologies for regional, economic and social benefits.

"Nutriloy will be putting a product on the test market soon. It is a beverage that is nutritious and enjoyable. We'll let you decide if you like the flavor," President Ron Sampson said, while a representative of Nutriloy handed out

investigate allegations

BY KRISTEN HAYS

The Ausociated Preus

HOUSTON - FBI agents arrived at Enron's headquarters Tuesday to investigate allegations of document shredding, while shareholders suing the fallen energy giant asked a federal judge to bar the company and its former auditor from destroying more records.

Enron said it has posted security guards to block employees from floors holding accounting and finance records.

"The company has done everything you'd expect under these circumstances," Enron attorney Kenneth Marks told U.S. District Judge Melinda Harmon.

The judge urged attorneys for both sides to come up with a plan to protect company documents and get back to her on Wednesday.

Enron's former auditor, Arthur Andersen, acknowledged this month that its Houston office had shredded Enron-related documents.

court order not to destroy any more Enron files.

Enron slid into the biggest bankruptcy in U.S. history last month after investigators began looking at a series of complex partnerships that were used to keep hundreds of millions in losses off the books.

Thousands of employees lost their jobs and their retirement nest eggs when Enron stock crashed.

Shareholders are suing Enron executives and directors for more than $1 billion they gained from selling Enron stock from 1998 through last November.

One of the shareholder attorneys, William Lerach, carried a box of shredded paper into court Tuesday, saying it came from a former Enron executive who saw Enron employees destroying documents as recently as last

"This is the shredded evidence that we got out of Enron," Lerach said as he entered court.

Mentally ill patience

Patients deserve better treatment, access to funds

'm sure when many people think of mental illness, they think of stories like "Hannibal," of straight jackets and men in white coats.

That is not reality.

The reality is that most people who suffer from a serious mental illness can lead normal lives with the help of therapy and medication.

One of my good friends grew up suffering from severe Attention Deficit

Hyperactivity

well as schizophrenia.

Disorder (ADHD), as

David McCandless

He struggled in school and had trouble keeping a job. However, he has a gift for music. He was writing songs by age 13, and plays several different instruments. He now operates his own recording studio and is pioneering the small-studio revolution of Internet music.

Medication has helped and he has become a productive member of society. But like many other mentally ill patients. he fell into drug and alcohol abuse as a coping mechanism to deal with the pain that medication and professional help couldn't heal.

There are many holes that current treatments don't adequately address for the millions of mentally ill Americans.

According to the National Alliance for the Mentally III (www.nami.org), more than 5 percent of American adults suffer from a serious mental illness.

This means that three people on an average residence hall floor could be mentally

It means that five women in an average sorority and three men in an average fraternity might suffer from a serious mental disorder.

Far from being a laughing matter, this shows that maybe someone you know is in need of medical treatment. until recently was a national center for the treatment of mental illness, I became familiar with the issues of mental health at an early age.

Not only was Topeka home to Menninger, a nationally-renowned psychiatric center, but also the site of the Kansas Neurological Institute, the Colmery-O'Neill Veteran's Medical Center, and the former Topeka State

After Topeka State Hospital closed in the early '90s, all of its former patients were forced out. Many ended up on the streets of Topeka.

The story of mental hospital patients being forced onto the streets is not restricted to Topeka. One-third of America's homeless suffer from a severe mental illness according to www.nami.org.

These are men and women who have suffered a great deal during their lifetimes. Many have endured the loss of their children and families, as well as their homes and their livelihoods

Having grown up in Topeka, a city that because of circumstances far beyond their control.

We must do a better job of ensuring that mentally ill people have access to consistent, quality health care.

We must also provide these men and women with a safe, permanent environment to live in.

It is the least we can do to ensure that they live comfortably and safely in a managed environment, even if it means devoting tax dollars to do it.

Where America really has failed our mentally ill, however, is in the court

Of the nearly 7 million Americans incarcerated or on probation, more than 800,000 of them are mentally ill. Many people argue that mental illness is no excuse for committing a crime, but what good is it going to do to throw these people into prison and turn them into better criminals?

Instead, why don't we, as a society, take a stand and demand that the mentally ill prisoners in our correctional system be placed in facilities where their illness can be treated? Then they can hope to be cured eventually, so they may lead a productive life and no longer be a burden to society.

It might be expensive, but only in the short run. In the long run, it would reduce the population of our revenueconsuming prisons and allow more people to enter the work force. That would then allow the mentally ill to contribute to tax revenues and the economy as a whole

Instead of writing off the mentally ill and throwing them into prison, why don't we give them a chance to show us the great things they are capable of?

If a person is sick, we can't punish them for being sick. We must help them to get better.

That is the fundamental problem our society must address. Will we do the right thing, or nothing at all?

Drive-thru not the place for phone conversations

ast-food companies should lobby Congress on banning cell-phone usage at drive-thru windows.

Lused to work at a fast-food restaurant, and I don't know how many times I saw people in line, packed in their cars like sardines, waiting for some rude idiot to finish his phone conversation before placing his

view

Amber Koehn

What irritated me most, however, was when people actually pulled up to the window, handed me their money. then told me to wait to hand them their order while they made a call.

What was so important to hold up the entire line of cars? Apparently, they had a problem waiting two seconds until they were out of line to call their moms and whine about how eating fast food was making them fat.

I knew when I took the job I would have to put up with a variety of customers. I could handle the occasional complaint about cold fries or flat soda.

What I wasn't prepared for was the insatiable amount of patrons who made others wait on them as well. It's just plain rude.

In an age where cell phones have become an extra limb for some people, it should be clearly stated when it's not OK to use them. Making fast-food employees and other customers wait while you call your bookie should be one of those times.

Whatever the conversation is, I'm sure it can wait until you've completed your business. Calling your long-lost twin might be important, but it's not going to matter if you call her after you've picked up your extra value meal.

After all, she's already waited several years. Waiting a few more minutes isn't going to ruin her day.

It might, however, ruin the day of the drive-thru employee who held his hand out the window for 10 minutes in subzero temperatures, clinching your Blizzard Flavor Treat, while you sat in your heated car explaining the meaning of life on your cell phone to your 3-year-old nephew.

This happens all the time, and it makes me wonder just how much common sense people really have. I mean, it should be automatic for people to wait to make a phone call until they're able to completely focus on who they're talking

I can understand if people are sitting in the drive-thru and their phone rings after they already have placed their

It gets out of hand when those people continue their conversations while at the actual window. They should tell the person on the other end they are busy and will call them back in a few minutes. So simple, yet rarely practiced.

I guess the whole concept of 'fast' food really hits home to some people. They drive up, place their order, pick up their order and drive off without taking a minute to see if their actions called for spit in their drinks or a few extra fries in their bag.

The incredibly talented people will do all that while trading stocks on their Nokias

Sometimes the outside world should be put on hold for a few minutes, and sometimes people should realize when and when not to call their manicurist.

The employees at these fast-food restaurants are doing the public a service and it shouldn't be taken lightly. You need to respect the people who serve you and not expect them to do more than what they were hired to do.

If it's a matter of life and death, then by all means make the call, but trust me, it seldom is. All you're doing is making it more and more difficult for the employees to do their job to

They do remember people, especially the ones who piss them off.

READERS WRITE

Reader questions validity of gender wage gap argument

Editor,

Several times a year, readers of the Collegian are treated to columns on women's equality. These columns invariably mention a "wage gap" between men and women. This was most recently discussed in "Aiming to Be Equal," a column by Jared Wiesner.

In his editorial, Wiesner used a statistic that a woman makes only 70 cents for every dollar a man makes. While such efforts for women's equality should be praised, the use of that statistic to support the existence of a wage gap is completely

In January 1999, President Clinton stated "women earn about 75 cents for every dollar a man earns." This has been the cry of countless women's organizations and editorialists since. However, this statistic is drastically skewed because it only compares the wages of all women working full time with the wages of all men working full time. It does not adjust for factors such as occupation, age, experience, education and consecutive years in the work force. These factors are important determinants of wages.

These also are factors in which women often lag behind men for one major reason. Eighty percent of women bear children at some point in their lives. Women, who are typically the primary care givers for their children, consider the responsibilities of motherhood when making employment decisions, and many women choose jobs where flexibility is greater and salaries are lower. The adjusted wage gap, adjusting wages for the above factors, is much, much smaller. In fact, equally qualified women make 95 to 100 percent of what men make.

I recommend that Wiesner, and anyone else who is interested, check out a book titled "Women's Figures: An Illustrated Guide to the Economic Progress of Women in America," by Christine Stolba and Diana Furchtgott-Roth. These two women systematically debunk the myth of a wage gap and show the great strides women have made in all aspects of life.

Associate provost to go on sabbatical at end of semester

BY AMBER KOEHN

Kansas State Collegian

He has been all over the world and has a library of books and artwork to show for it.

"If I'm traveling in a country, I try to pick up something on the language," said William Richter, associate provost of international programs.

"But I cannot tell you more than one or two words in Irish-Gaelic, or most of the other languages for that matter."

Richter, who has directed the office of international programs since its start in 1991, will go on sabbatical after this semester and return to the university some time next year.

He has been employed at K-State since 1966.

Richter said he can get by in Hindi, Urdu, Russian, French and Spanish, but English is the only language in which he's fluent.

"I really enjoy languages," he

"It's a tremendous thrill when you reach the point where you're able to converse with people in their native language.

"I think the office's responsibilities have grown in the last decade," he said, "and the program has developed to a point where it's a good time for a transition.

There's a lot still to be done, but there's a momentum the new associate provost will be able to build upon.'

The university already has for a new provost who will replace Richter after he leaves in July.

begun its search

Richter said he looked at the university's leadership and was confident the transition would be smooth. "I am very comfortable with this decision, and I have had a lot of support," he said.

Provost James Coffman said people who have worked with Richter support what he has done for K-State.

"Bill Richter has given the largest part of his career to K-State," Coffman said. "His efforts have been devoted to developing a university-wide program in support of strengthening international initiatives, and he continues to be a valuable source of insight on university issues across a broad front.

Richter considers himself fortunate to be part of the international programs, but he said he wasn't the only person responsible for initiating them.

"A lot of people in the university have put a lot of effort into building the international programs," he said. "It's been a collective effort, and I don't want to take credit for everything."

Richter, who also developed the South Asia Center, has been teaching and doing research for many years. He received his bachelor's degrees in political science and history, and his master's degree and doctorate in political science. From 1984 to 1993, Richter taught political science at K-State. He also researched in India and Pakistan, which he said he really enjoyed.

"My wife and I had a really good time over there," he said. "It seems my entire career has been connected to international programs."

Richter said his career was challenging, especially with the budget shortfalls of recent years.

"The greatest challenge has been operating in this period of financial stringency," he said. "We've had to find other resources, but we've had generous alumni and friends.'

One of those friends, Joseph Barton-Dobenin, made a commitment to donate more than $3 million to the programs.

Barton-Dobenin was one of the main people to establish an exchange program between K-State and Prague, Czech Republic.

George Strecker, professor of mathematics, also opened the doors to study abroad programs at Charles University and the Czech Technical Institute.

"It was his idea to begin an exchange program with the math students, and it has become the most popular place for students to study," said Richter.

Strecker said he enjoyed working with Richter, and he certainly be will missed.

"I have always viewed him as a friendly, honest and accessible colleague and administrator," he

"He has a passion for developing international programs and increasing international contacts. When I had the idea to start exchange programs with Czech universities in the late 1980s, he was instrumental in shepherding them through the labyrinth of approvals that were required."

As he finishes his last semester as international programs provost. Richter already is planning his return to K-State. "I would like to teach a couple of political science courses again," he said. Richter said he'll miss his job, but he'll also miss seeing the relationships formed between the exchange students.

"It's thrilling to see the benefits studying abroad brings to students, and the relationships that are formed because of those opportunities."

KU game remains important

A speed bump. That's what we'll call K-State's 68-60 loss to Oklahoma State on Jan. 19. And as the Cats prepare to take the court tonight against Kansas in their first action since losing to the Cowgirls, it's imperative that Coach

Dan Smith

Patterson's team see it that way as well. Far short of a must-win game, though, tonight's contest gives K-State a chance to get back to the basics and prove they belong in the top 10 again.

You also could call the purple's first conference loss a rite of passage.

Other than the Cats, six Big 12 teams call the top 25 home and K-State already has beaten three of them. But in this conference, nobody escapes without a scratch, and hopefully Patterson's squad learned that lesson in Stillwater.

The Wildcats should come into tonight's game confident, heads held high and with something to prove after dropping the ball against Oklahoma State on Saturday. Even after the loss, K-State still owned a share of the Big 12 lead along with No. 4 Oklahoma and No. 13 Texas.

Texas took a half-game lead over the Cats with last night's win over Missouri, but K-State should beat KU tonight to keep pace with the Longhorns.

Tonight's contest also counts as one of only a handful of tune-ups left for the

With only two games left before a Jan. 30 visit to Austin and six remaining before the Sooners come to Manhattan on Feb. 13, few opportunities remain to fix what's broken before a loss causes major damage.

Battle-testing will be key when games like K-State's Jan. 27 contest against No. 12 Texas Tech and the Feb. 2 rematch with No. 14 Iowa State roll around, and the Cats need to learn to win the close games.

Patterson's squad is growing up quickly and learning the ropes in a tight conference. While tonight's game lacks the attention that contests further down the road will garner, a few things remain true. First, it's still KU. The Jayhawks have beaten K-State in seven of the schools' last eight meetings, including the last four games. And second, it's still Bramlage Coliseum, where the Cats are undefeated this season.

At 5-14 overall and winless in the Big 12, KU presents an interesting challenge for the Cats tonight. With nothing to lose and everything to gain, the Jayhawks are ready to start playing the role of conference spoiler.

A matchup against an in-state rival always raises the level of competitiveness on the court and, with the exception of Nebraska, K-State fans hate no team more than the Jayhawks.

The product? Tonight, raw emotion comes out as Laurie Koehn, Kendra Wecker and Nicole Ohlde play in front of a sold-out crowd for the second consecutive time at Bramlage Coliseum.

Let's just hope that speed bump doesn't sneak up on the Cats again tonight.

Two more locations available for students to pick up tickets

Students wanting to attend tonight's K-State/Kansas women's basketball game can pick up their tickets in two additional locations.

The tickets, which are free of charge to the first 1,300 students with valid ID, will be available in the K-State Student Union, next to the Food Court from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Students may also pick up their tickets from the Bramlage Coliseum Ticket Office anytime from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Any remaining tickets will be made available at the game one hour before tipoff at 7 p.m. Students wanting to attend the game without a complimentary ticket may still due so by purchasing a $2 ticket at the door.

Victory tonight translates to leg up in recruiting process

hen K-State and KU take the court tonight, bragging rights won't be the only thing on the line.

The Wildcats and Jayhawks also will be jockeying for the top recruiting spot in the state, and with the caliber of talent K-State Coach Deb Patterson has inked in the last two years, the battle seems to be heating up quickly.

"We understand that our institutions have that intrastate rivalry, and we also understand. from our perspective, that it's been a long time since we've beaten Kansas," Patterson said.

"We've got a great deal of pride, and we're looking forward to an opportunity to line it up again and be a much more competitive basketball team than we've been the last few times we've played KU."

However, although the Jayhawks have taken seven of the last eight meetings between the schools, including all of the last four, Kansas Coach Marian Washington lost the recruiting war for prep stars Nicole Ohlde. Laurie Koelin and Kendra Wecker.

because actually the last four or five years, they've been working to try to get that program turned around, and it finally happened. "I think she's got a class that will help her do that for at least the next three or four years."

But recognition aside, both coaches acknowledge that several of the state's top high school prospects finalizing their college plans in the next few weeks will be tuning in tonight to see which program has the upper hand in the rivalry. Sometimes, that process even means breaking with tradition.

"People really get caught up with whether we're going to be able to get certain players in the state," Washington said.

"There are some people that bleed blue and some people that bleed purple, and it's not easy when you have a history with a school."

Regardless of the program, though, youth usually translates into growing pains. The Wildcats, however, have managed to avoid that stage of the process. Ohlde, Koehn and Wecker have made an impact with the Cats, and Big 12 teams are beginning to find out firsthand.

All rank in the top three in point production, averaging a combined 52.1 points per 43-percent clip from beyond the arc. "It's hard to know whether freshmen can impact you right away." Washington said.

"Koehn has been there a year, and she had an opportunity to be a part of their workouts on the sidelines, so she had a distinct advantage, and Ohlde has played in the system. 'I think Wecker probably surprised me more than any of them. She's just a phenomenal athlete, extremely strong, It's amazing what she's doing for them."

Tonight, Patterson will be hoping the trio can end K-State's four-game skid against the Jayhawks and show potential recruits the type of effect this group of Kansans has been able to achieve so far this season.

"Obviously, for anyone we're recruiting instate, I think it is a great positive for them to see the impact that the local players can make and the attention that they draw," she said.

just one conference loss in 14. This season, though, K-State (17-2, 5-1) is fighting for the lead in the Big 12 conference and will face three ranked teams following tonight's contest. As a result, one loss isn't cause for much concern for Coach Deb Patterson.

"I think we've got a great sense for the fact that we're a team that's going to be fighting nip and tuck through the course of this Big 12 schedule," she said. Patterson's confidence was helped by the high level of practice the team had after the OSU loss,

"Yesterday was an exceptionally sharp and productive and intense practice," she said. "This is a very competitive group and if they weren't, they wouldn't have the success they've

In order to defeat the Jayhawks (5-14, 0-6), K-State must solve its offensive problems . On Saturday, the Cowgirls put on a clinic on how to beat the Cats. Texas A &M did the same thing Jan. 16 and nearly knocked off K-State.

KU is sure to use the same strategy, but the Cats won't need to alter their offensive game plan, sophomore Nicole Ohlde

"Them being aggressive and pressuring us did a lot to our offense," she said.

K-State also will have to learn to compete in close games. Against Oklahoma State, Patterson said she felt that her team didn't have the mental edge it needed to pull away from the Cowgirls. Against KU and during the rest of the season, however, the team will have to find that edge, Patterson said.

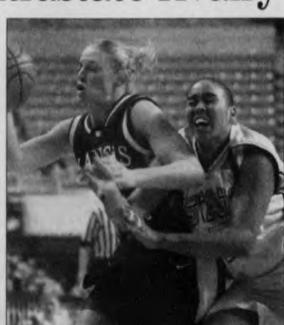

"I believe our basketball team is going to be in close games," she said. "I just think the league is too good."

The players realize how tough the Big 12 Conference is and that no game is safe, even one against a team from the bottom of the standings like Kansas, senior guard Kristin Rethman said.

"On any given night in the Big 12, anybody can beat anybody and that's definitely been proven thus far," she said. One advantage K-State will have in tonight's game is the home crowd. Tonight's sellout crowd will be the second of four consecutive capacity audiences at Bramlage Coliseum. At Oklahoma State, purple shirts outnumbered those in orange in the crowd. Patterson said she appreciates the fan support but realizes that crowd loyalty depends on how well the team plays. "I think it's impressive," she said. "I think it's the beginning of something very special, but we've got to do the work to bring them back over and over again."

Cars need maintenance in preparation for winter

BY JENNIFER FARR Kansas State Collegian

When she turned on her car heater last week, Fumi Nakamura, junior in business, said she was surprised when cold air blasted out.

Expecting just a minor heater repair, Nakamura said she intended to take her car to a mechanic, but then it stopped running.

This was a big inconvenience, during last week's colder temperatures and snow, she said.

"I was really frustrated because all I was trying to do was keep myself warm and my car kept breaking down on me," she said. "Since I don't know anything about cars, I brought it to the shop and they fixed it."

She said mechanics told her she needed the cooling system and her car's alternator fixed, a problem that was aggravated by the colder weather.

As the mild winter weather ends and lower temperatures approach, owners should prepare their cars for harsher conditions to prevent winter damage, area mechanics said.

Justin Walker, mechanic at Wildcat 'Amoco, said one common problem is people not having enough antifreeze in their cars.

Walker said a lack of antifreeze in the car can make the water in the car freeze. Without antifreeze, the car will not run properly, he said, if at all.

Antifreeze testers are available at any local hardware store.

Walker also said he suggested using products like Heet in the gas to provide moisture, instead of filling the gas tank full. Shelling out a little money on smaller items that prevent problems can reduce costly repair "People should just remember that the key ingredient to surviving the winter is to make sure that regular maintenance is completed beforehand," he said.

Auto Service, said if people do not know much about cars, they should not try to solve the problems alone.

"You don't want to take something on that you don't know about," Muscheid said. "For example, if you don't know that much about jumper cables, don't attempt to put them on yourself in some serious danger." He said many winter problems are also caused by car batteries. The summer is harder on the battery, but the lights used in the winter tend to cause problems.

Winterizing tips

Luke Redington, senior in English, said he realizes taking care of his car during the winter is mostly about preventive measures. Redington said he has not noticed his car operating differently yet, but he is glad he is prepared.

"I made sure that my tires have enough tread and didn't leak air, and I had enough antifreeze," he said. "A lot of people don't realize this, but winter is when the engine has the greatest danger of burning up, and keeping enough antifreeze prevents that."

Both mechanics said people should be cautious. They said it is essential to keep the gas tank full and to keep emergency supplies in the car.

Aspirin therapy might not be needed

BY TARA PATTY

Kansas State Collegian

Taking one white tablet a day could save a life, but might be an unnecessary precaution.

Aspirin therapy is a form of heart-attack prevention and also reduces the chance of a blood clot, which could cause a stroke. Patients who are on aspirin therapy usually take between 81 and 325 mg daily, based on stomach sensitivity, to prevent coronary problems.

"What is the right dose? There's no answer," said Dr. Robert Roeder, cardiologist with Cotton-O'Neil Heart Center in Topeka, "There are different sensitivities."

Although at-risk patients typically don't start this therapy until age 40, doctors may prescribe aspirin therapy to diabetic students between 18 and 40 in rare cases, said Roeder.

There is no reason, however, for healthy college students to take aspirin except for pain control, Roeder said. Students who take aspirin occasionally or are on the therapy should be careful, he said, because harmful drug interactions can occur.

He said students should be wary of aspirin, especially when drinking large amounts of alcohol. The interaction could result in liver and kidney problems.

"Students who have reached the age of 20 should have a lipid profile to check their cholesterol levels," he said.

Students should talk with their physician about taking the test. These levels, he said, can indicate coronary disease later in life.

which might require aspirin therapy

Students are not the only ones who should think twice before taking aspirin.

Anyone taking aspirin might experience common side effects, such as bleeding problems in addition to bruising, prolonged oozing after oral surgery and increased asthma and allergy problems, Roeder said.

However, there is one advantage to these side effects Roeder, said. An early detection of colon cancer often occurs because of aspirin's effect on a person's bleeding.

"People taking aspirin tend to bleed earlier," he said.

Doctors, however, mostly prescribe this therapy to individuals with high cholesterol, high blood pressure and other risk factors. For these patients, there are many benefits.

Dr. Nanda Kumar, neurologist at the Manhattan Medical Center. said aspirin acts as a blood thinner and also reduces the stickiness of the platelets in the blood so they won't stick to arterial walls.

Aspirin also has a relatively low cost, Kumar said, in addition to its low maintenance, which requires moderate to little attention from a doctor.

"If it's not upsetting the stomach, you don't have to be monitored as much," he said. "You have to have blood tests for others, such as Coumadin, a blood thinner.'

For those who suffer from an upset stomach when taking aspirin, some doctors are recommending a lower dosage of 81 mg, commonly referred to as baby aspirin. This dosage, Kumar said, still has the thinning effect on the blood without causing discom-

However, Roeder said that because no studies have been done extensively on the benefits of baby aspirin, the higher dosage is ideal. Janice Blazek, director of Stoneybrook Assisted Living in Manhattan, said that although aspirin therapy has seemed to capture media attention, a large percentage of residents at Stoneybrook are not on daily aspirin regimens.

Blazek said she suspects doctors in larger cities are prescribing the therapy more frequently, but it is not widespread at the center.

"Obviously, if doctors think a person may have a stroke, they put them on aspirin," Blazek said. "It depends on the doctor."

KMART

"I like it here. I like the people," Rittersdorf said. The company said it will reorganize on a fast-track basis and hopes to emerge from Chapter 11 in 2003.

Kmart's bankruptcy declaration is the largest in the retail business since Federated Department Stores Inc. filed for Chapter 11 in 1990 and emerged two years later.

Federated had assets of $11.4 billion when it filed in January 1990. Kmart's assets in its latest Securities and Exchange Commission filing were just over $17 billion.

"We are determined to complete our reorganization as quickly and smoothly as possible, while taking full advantage of this chance to make a fresh start and reposition Kmart for the future," Kmart CEO Chuck Conaway said in a statement.

Kmart officials on Jan. 10 announced that the company would not meet Wall Street's consensus expectation for earnings of a penny a share for fiscal 2001, and suggested it might seek additional financing.

The holiday shopping period didn't help Kmart rebound. The company said that for the fiveweek period ended Jan. 2, the close of its fiscal year, net sales slipped 1 percent on a same-store basis from the previous year.

Total net sales for the period were $5.52 billion, down slightly from $5.54 billion for the same period last year, Kmart said.

Its stock plunged and the company was removed from Standard & Poor's benchmark index of 500 leading stocks. Major credit rating agencies cut their ratings for its debt in recent Kmart said its decision to seek bankruptcy protection was based on a combination of factors, including its below-plan sales and earnings performance in the fourth quarter.

Kmart, founded as S.S. Kresge Co., began as a modest five-anddime store in downtown Detroit more than a century ago. The first Kmart discount store opened in 1962, and by the 1970s, the Kmart stores accounted for most of the company's sales.

Despite its current woes, Kmart has seen improvements since it was at the brink of death in the mid-1990s, when the company suffered heavy losses, closed stores and laid off employees.

The Martha Stewart Everyday brand, which covers such products as sheets, towels, paints and kitchenware, is Kmart's largest volume-producing label, generating about $1 billion in sales last year.

Since Conaway became Kmart's CEO in May 2000, he has closed unproductive stores, reintroduced the BlueLight Special discount, and made other changes to help the retailer become more productive and more efficient.

Analyst Michael Bernacchi, a professor of marketing at the University of Detroit Mercy, said Kmart suffers because it isn't seen as deep a discounter as Wal-Mart, and it doesn't have the upscale touch that the Minneapolis-based Target portrays.

After the attack, Mueller sounded a cautious note, saying it was too early to call it terrorism.

Willie Nelson's talent fades with new album

BY JJ DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

o matter how you look at it, Willie Nelson just isn't the artist he used to be. From 1975 to 1982. Nelson won five grammies, and now at the age of 68, Nelson hasn't won a grammy since. "The Great Divide" isn't the album that will get him recognition again.

So what's the difference? First off, Nelson's writing credit appears on only one song out of the 12 on the album. The rest is a risky mix of covers, guest appearances and songs by Rob Thomas (of Matchbox 20) and Bernie Taupin (who co-wrote many of Elton John's hits)

Maybe Nelson is burned out on the song-writing process. Instead of memorable pieces of mastery like "Gotta Get Drunk," the only song he contributed is the mediocre title track stuck in the middle of the album. Still, his voice glides over "The Great Divide" effortlessly, compared to his vocals on some of the other

As far as the other songs, pop writer phenom Rob Thomas put his pen to three songs without further collaboration. That lack of input from Nelson shows on the entire album. He doesn't care as much about his music anymore. Where his contemporaries, such as Bob Dylan and Mick lagger, have released significant new albums in the past year, Nelson's heart just isn't in it. With so many guest appearances, it seems he was trying to recreate lagger's success as well as his method.

lagger featured many guests on "Goddess in the Doorway" but his input still shaped the album. making it an artistic statement. As Rob Thomas said in an interview with Launch after writing songs for both albums, he wrote the songs with Jagger, but Nelson just chose three pre-written songs.

Despite the absence of Nelson's creative side, the risks he takes are to be commended. Not many country artists would take on Cyndi Lauper's "Time After Time," but Nelson actually lends it a mature grace.

In fact, the most redeeming quality of the album is the truthful and sentimental values that are piped through Nelson's reknowned voice. In "Last Stand in Open Country" you get the feeling Nelson knows the lyrics better than anyone else when he sings, "I come around full circle, aged like an old dog / Lookin' at them young bucks just green as frogs / But I ain't layin' back."

The catchiest work is easily from Thomas, including the lead track, "Maria." The upbeat music with the vocal compliments are perfect for Nelson's style as he sings the memorable chorus, "Maria, shut up and kiss me / You're crazy and it turns me on and on / The way you're carryin'

Though the Thomas tunes turn out well, many of the guests just seem like gimmicks to get more people to buy the album.

Kid Rock and LeAnn Womack's appearances really don't augment the songs. They're just tribute appearances to appease the Godfather of modern country

High standards have been set for Nelson's work, but he created them himself. When his contemporaries (at least age-wise) are releasing such excellent albums, Nelson shouldn't get away with a tired half-effort like "The Great Divide."

BY ADAM LEE Ramas State Co.

Gene Hackman's royal treatment at the Golden Globe Awards Sunday was well deserved.

His reception of the best comic actor award from the Golden Globes was a result of his captivating performance in "The Royal Tenenbaums." Hackman plays Royal Tenenbaum, a disbarred litigator who has managed to alienate himself from his entire family.

Royal and his wife Etheline (Angelica Houston), an archeologist, separated for undisclosed reasons, but were never officially divorced. Since their split, Royal has moved into a hotel suite and cut off all ties with his relations.

Royal's loneliness combined with his exhausted finances force him to try to win his way back into his home and his family. But this is quite a family.

The Tenenbaum children were each regarded as geniuses in their youth. In fact, Etheline even wrote a book on raising gifted children. But in the time since their parents' separation, all of them have fallen on hardship.

Richie (Luke Wilson), was a tennis phenom who won back to back U.S. Opens before suffering a nervous breakdown and leaving tennis to sail around the world.

Chas (Ben Stiller), was a successful real estate broker and business tycoon, but has become obsessed with the safety of his two boys Ari and Uzi after the death of his wife in an airplane crash.

Margot (Gwenyth Paltrow) was an accomplished playwright, but has regressed to spending most her time watching TV while in the bathtub.

In desperation to win his family's love, Royal at first pretends to be terminally ill with stomach cancer. Even with this pathetic attempt at re-establishing his patriarchy, Royal's children aren't easily swayed, and when the truth about his illness is discovered, things really start to get interesting.

Hackman is incredibly dynamic in his role. On the surface, he appears to be an abrasive tyrant who takes joy in belittling his family. But through the course of the film, he is revealed to be the grandfather everyone wishes for.

"The Royal Tenenbaums" has many obvious ties to Wes Anderson's previous work while standing on its own.

In "Bottle Rocket," the writing team of Anderson and Owen Wilson addressed the undirected energy of a generation with a story about overzealous yet underqualified criminals.

Hackman deserving of recent Golden Globe award

"Rushmore" uses a prep school playwright and a millionaire to examine the effects of love. For "The Royal Tenenbaums," Wilson and Anderson have created a family of deteriorated geniuses in order to study depression.

Is it possible to make a comedy that deals with depression, drug abuse, and suicide?

Anderson has. "The Royal Tenenbaums" is filled with the same dry, intelligent humor that made his previous films so enjoyable.

The main difference between this movie and his previous works is its size. "The Royal Tenenbaums" is overflowing with big stars, eccentric characters and complicated plot lines. Even Anderson's directorial style seems to be pushed to its limit with slow motion shots, a savvy soundtrack and white fonts labeling

A bigger budget doesn't necessarily make for better film making. Wes Anderson proves this with his latest film.

Career and Employment Services

Contact us today, and start dreaming! Here is a profile of a K-State student who got R.E.A.L.

How did you find your internship?

I found my internship through Jay Lotz, a friend of my family who lived next door to us in Ohio, when I lived there in High School. I tried to sell him ad slicks for my hockey team one year and he gave me a brief overview of his company and what he does. It sounded pretty interesting, so I kept that in mind for future reference. Relationships are key, and if you can build those, you will prosper in any business or life experience.

What were your day-to-day responsibilities (or describe a typical day on the job)?

During the internship position with IMG, I was involved with the Motorsports Division as well as the Creative Design Division. In the Motorsports Division, my responsibilities would entail talking on the phones, processing orders for race weekend, providing customers with faxed, mailed, over the phone information, or even providing assistance via the internet site IMG setup for the Grand Prix. I would set up charities, barters, comps, and other promotional or contracted deals for companies. I would interact with fans the weekend of the race as well as provide authoritative help to allow resolution for irate fans.

What did you expect from your internship (and were your expectations fulfilled)?

I expected to be treated as a regular employee and learn the business through others. I was amazed at how easy it was for me to fit in. They allowed me to sit in on meetings, confrence calls, and business functions. They let me spread my wings and be creative with my goals or ideas. The most important thing they instilled in me was to build relationships. My expectations were certainly met.

What was the best thing about your internship? I loved the meeting we had when Mark Steinberg talked a group of about 40 interns. He is Tiger Woods' agent, along with Vince Carter, and Anika Sorenstam. He is only 33, yet so successful and well-known across the world. He explained so many things about the company and his life of being Tiger's agent. He has such a personal relationship with Tiger and with others such as Michael Jordan and Vince Carter. It was very interesting seeing the intricacies involved in the lives of sports figures.

What did you learn?

Sales is second to relationships. Building and maintaining relationships is everything. You cannot be a successful business person without having strong relationships; everything will fall without them.

Did you have any brushes with fame or fortune? I had the opportunity to meet Sergio Garcia, yet I wasn't able to attend that night's events. I met Mark Steinberg, sailed on the Tall Ships, an event that IMG holds every year, met some Grand Prix drivers. In this business, fame and fortune is an everyday occurrence, so to get caught up in it would only hinder future relations.

What was your oddest/most challenging project? The weekend of the race, just helping people with their needs and providing assistance. There were times people couldn't get in because when they ordered tickets, their boss did it for them and put it under a name that we couldn't find. We spent 30 minutes tracking down the credentials and tickets for these people.

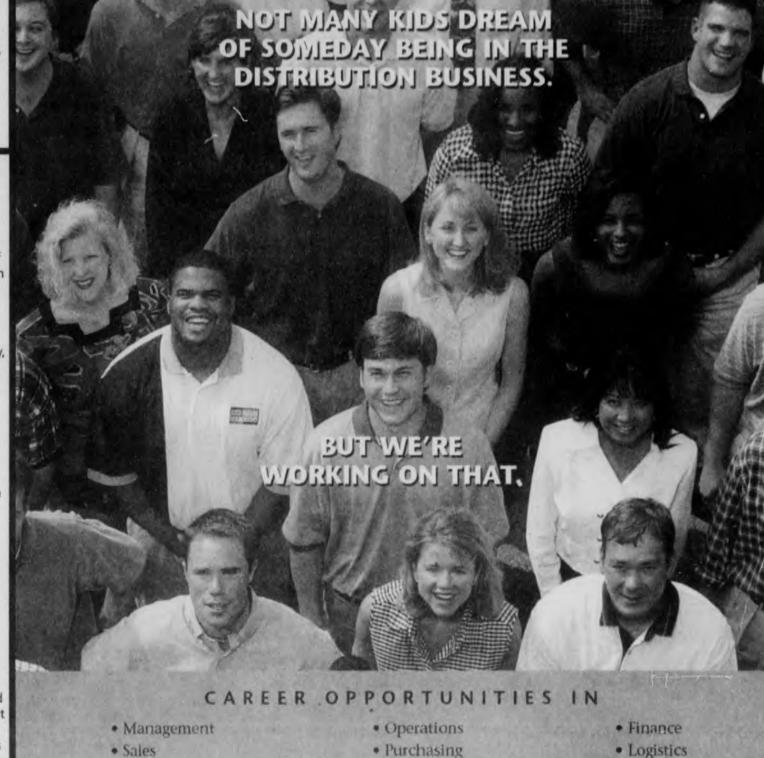

What advice would you offer students seeking an internship experience?

Try to interview with every and all companies you find. Build relationships with people and maybe look to see if you know anyone in a certain company that can help you out. In today's world, knowing people is such a great advantage. Do it as soon as possible. Getting an internship, will give you a tremendous advantage in the future.

3 arrests made in drug raid

BY TARA PATTY

Kansan State Collegian

A K-State employee was arrested on his way home from work late Tuesday night in connection to a methamphetamine labora-

Ronald Brouhard, custodial specialist at the vet med center, was taken into custody after the Riley County Police Department discovered the lab in the basement apartment of 804 Fremont St.

RCPD investigations division Capt. Gary. Grubbs said intelligence information led to the discovery of the meth lab. Where the supplies came from is still under investigation, he said.

Dennis Ahlvers, physical plant supervisor at the vet med center, said no action has been taken to terminate Brouhard's employment.

"We haven't heard anything different," Ahlvers said. "We haven't officially been notified of anything."

The Riley County Police Department is warning local business owners to be on the lookout for counterfeit cash.

Three bills - two $20s and one $50 passed through Manhattan businesses this past week on two separate occasions. RCPD Detective Brad Schlerf said he was not sure if the offenses were connected.

"The two $20s have the same serial number, so we know they came from the same place," he said. "But the number on the $50 is different."

The serial number BG14336691G was found on the $20s, and Schlerf said he was unsure if the same suspect or suspects were responsible for both.

Schlerf said the bills were of very high quality and had good graphics.

"People need to be on the lookout for watermarks, which are holographic pictures of whatever president is on the bill, and micro-printing, which is very small print identifying the dollar amount of the bill. If a bill does not have these two things, it is counterfeit," he said.

Schlerf said producing counterfeit cash is a Federal offense, and the case has been reported to the U.S. Secret Service. It will be prosecuted on a Federal level.

"Anytime there's a monetary crime, it is reported to the Secret Service," said Schlerf. "We maintain the information at a local level in an active investigation."

The bills were found at First Bank, Sonic restaurant and Food 4 Less. No other duplicates have been spotted.

Mike Mores, assistant director of promotions, bottom left, and Melynda Stein, marketing and promotions assistant, bottom right, hand out tickets in the K-State Student Union on Wednesday to the women's basketball game against Kansas. Students could pick up one ticket per ID. There were 1,300 tickets available for free to students.

1,300 women's basketball tickets offered free to students

ildcat students saw something new from the women's basketball team at the K-State Student Union on Wednesday — tickets.

Representatives from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics were in the Union handing out 1,300 tickets for the low cost of flashing a valid K-State ID. Officials said this method of distributing tickets will remain throughout the end of the year. Tickets previously were distributed at Bramlage Coliseum.

Mike Mores, assistant director of promotions, said the switch in policy was made to get students tickets, which are becoming hard to come by. Giving them away in the Union will get them into the Coliseum.

"At the start of the season, the policy was as it has been for many years," Mores said. "The students could get in with their

"When the students were gone over break, people were buying up the tickets for these last four or five games. We had to do something to make sure the students could still get in.

Melynda Stein, athletic department marketing intern, said the new policy is an expandable one, made with both the team and students in mind.

"The policy is great," Stein said. "We definitely want students to come, and if we are able to get rid of 1,300 tickets. we will up the number next year.

"Eventually, we would like to have a student section. It creates a good atmosphere and a great crowd."

Josh Umbehr, junior in nutrition science, said he believes paying for tardiness is necessary in preparing students for the dedication it takes to support a winning cause. "I say they are going to need money to get better," Umbehr said. "They will need money to improve, and if staying in the top 10 means $2 for students, it is worth it."

Staying in the top 10 means winning. And at 16-2, the Cats are doing that. Shana Kerstetter, senior in family life and community services, said students should back a winning cause.

. "The men's team makes money," Kerstetter said. "The women are winning, and it makes sense for them to take full advantage of the situation. We should support that."

With a Bramlage record attendance of 13,466 at the Nebraska game, and selling out tickets for upcoming Iowa State and Texas Tech, support has not been a problem for the Wildcats.

Justin Ross, freshman in business, says paying for tickets will not become an issue for students.

"If you come early, you can still get your ticket for free," Ross said. "If they run out, it is just 2 bucks, so they may as well take

Mores said running out of tickets should not become an issue with more than 1,300 free tickets available to the student

"These tickets are for students," Mores said. "If we have leftovers, we will allow students to come in until the arena is filled. This is new. We did not expect to have this problem, but what a great problem to have."

K-State administrators face hearing on drug charges

Keessa Stole Collegion

Two K-State administrators face drug charges in a suppression hearing today.

Reginland McGowan and Renee Freeman were arrested and charged with possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia Aug. 24 in Junction City. Their original Oct. 30 court date was moved to Jan. 24. At that time, a motion for suppression resulted in today's hearing.

Both McGowan and Freeman have administrative positions with the university's educational and personal development programs.

McGowan, assistant vice president of educational and personal development programs, supervises grants for programs such as Upward Bound and GEAR UP (Gaining Early Awareness and Readiness for Undergraduate Programs). Freeman, director of GEAR UP II, has basic program planning duties.

Michael Lynch, associate vice president of educational and personal development programs, said McGowan and Freeman's job duties have not changed since their arrest. Since he doesn't know the legal outcome yet, he said he doesn't want to speculate on action the department could take. "What transpires (in court) will influence the ultimate outcomes," Lynch said.

If they are found guilty, Lynch said state and federal employee policies would come into play. "I start out with the basic assumption that they are innocent until proven guilty," he

McGowan and Freeman also work with Junction County Middle School administrators through GEAR UP.

Today's hearing begins at 10 a.m. in the Geary County District Court.

The Geary County assistant attorney was not available for comment Wednesday. McGowan's attorney, Steven Opat, and Freeman's attorney, Michael McKone, couldn't be reached for comment.

Kmart waiting on notices from headquarters, employee says local store will remain open

With the Kmart Corporation filing for Chapter 11 this week, the status of individual stores remains up in the air. The Manhattan Kmart store is one of many awaiting future word on whether they will close or remain open.

Jeanel Drake/

BY MICHAEL WATSON Ransas State Collegian

Manhattan's Big Kmart should not be closing, Kmart cashier Justin Burgoon, said.

Kmart Inc., the No. 3 retailer, behind Wal-Mart and Target, filed for bankruptcy protection Tuesday, becoming the largest retailer to seek shelter from creditors under Chapter 11. The first Kmart discount store was founded in 1962. Kmart officials announced last week that 2001 sales figures would not indicate a profit, but would barely break even because of disappointing holiday sales. Kmart said it will close weak stores and that it expects to emerge from Chapter 11 next year.

Burgoon, freshman in parasitology, said that even though Kmart stores across the nation are expected to fold, local management told employees the Manhattan store should remain open.

"Nobody knows for sure, but they said the Manhattan store makes enough money to stay open," he said. "I don't think we have done as good as last year, but it has been busy."

Manhattan store management would not comment on the status of the store. All information is being handled at Kmart headquarters in Troy, Mich.

Kmart officials could not be reached to comment on the Manhattan Kmart, but a recorded message indicated that all stores are to remain open until further notice.

Analysts said they expect Kmart to close as many as 700 of its 2,114 U.S. stores.

Senate outlines proposal to up alcohol, tobacco tax

TOPEKA - A Senate committee's chairman outlined a new proposal Wednesday for increasing tobacco and alcohol taxes to prevent cuts in the state budget.

The Assessment and Taxation Committee voted to introduce the plan from Sen. David Corbin, who scheduled a hearing for Monday. The bill would raise nearly $87 million for the 2003 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

Cigarette taxes would increase 35 cents a pack, to 59 cents, and the tax on other tobacco products, such as snuff, would double to 20 percent. Taxes would increase on all alcoholic

The plan is less ambitious than Gov. Bill Graves' proposals to raise cigarette. sales and motor fuels taxes and vehicle registration fees to raise $228 million for fiscal 2003.

NATION IN BRIEF

Andersen senior officials begin to receive subpoenas

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Senior officials of the Arthur Andersen accounting firm are receiving subpoenas to compel them to testify to Congress about the massive destruction of Enron-related documents.

Subpoenas are going to Andersen chief executive Joseph Berardino, fired auditor David Duncan, attorney Nancy Temple and risk manager Michael Odom for their testimony at a House hearing Thursday.

"No one's getting a free pass on this one," said Ken Johnson, spokesman for the House Energy and Commerce Committee

In a sprawling inquiry with both financial and political overtones, 11 House and Senate committees are investigating the Enron debacle, while the Justice Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission pursue their own less visible probes.

In Houston on Tuesday, FBI agents arrived at the soaring headquarters building to look into other alleged shredding while attorneys for investors suing Enron asked a federal judge to bar the company and Andersen from destroying any more

ATTACK DEVELOPMENTS

- Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, under fire from human rights groups, said the United States is treating war detainees at Guantanamo Bay humanely, and in accordance with Geneva Conventions.
- FBI director Robert Mueller visiting Kandahar said that interrogating members of Osama bin Laden's terror network, detained at the U.S. military base in Kandahar, has prevented new attacks against U.S. targets worldwide.
- U.S. District Judge A. Howard Matz did not rule Tuesday on the demand by human rights activists to give Afghan detainees due process.

Instead, the judge gave federal prosecutors until Jan. 31 to file papers challenging the petition on jurisdictional grounds.

- Afghan leader Hamid Karzai visited China to seek more financial aid. Beijing contributed just $1 million of $4.5 billion pledged at a conference of nearly 60 donor nations that concluded Tuesday in Tokyo. Beijing says it will consider more aid.
- The American Civil Liberties Union has sued two New Jersey counties, accusing them of violating state law by not releasing names and other information of detainees held in county jails since the Sept. 11 attacks.

The group estimated that 400 to 700 people are being held as part of the government's terrorism probe on't be surprised when a 52-year-old student sings as she walks across campus. Gretchen Esping, graduate teaching assistant at the Center for the Advancement of Teaching and Learning, said she constantly smiles as she lives each day to the fullest. Esping came to K-State two years ago to finish her life-long goal of receiving a doctoral degree in teaching.

"I was inexperienced and a fool when I was young," she said. "Being a late bloomer is all right though because in the end, it always works out for the best."

Esping is studying educational administration and leadership with an emphasis in higher education administration.

Several times a semester, Esping teaches Principles of College Teaching. She is the secretary for both the Faculty Affairs Committee for the Faculty Senate and the Tilford Group, a diversity and multicultural research and development group.

"Everything has been a learning process all the time," she said. "I go to several meetings and see how people interact with each other, which serves as a better teacher for me than most classes have been."

Before attending K-State, Esping lived in Sweden for five years and taught elementary art classes in Kansas City.

She taught humanities classes at K-State-Salina for six years. She also spent eight years as a librarian at Bethany College.

"I've had many great experiences that have helped me to appreciate things more," she said.

America needs individuals with the courage to lead - leaders like Martin Luther King Jr., John Slaughter, an MLK Observance Week speaker, said.

King had a dream that one day all men would be treated equally. King acted upon his dreams so people today could live their own dreams, Slaughter said Wednesday in his "Remembering the Dream" speech.

What have we learned from his fights and his death? Have we have lived out his dream?

"No," Slaughter said. "There are more Americans living in poverty today than when King died.

"Streets are now a marketplace for drugs. In Harlem, a black man has less of a chance of living to age 40 than a man in Bangladesh. Housing is becoming increasingly segregated."

As Americans, we should work together to live King's dream of equality, Slaughter said.

This is a critical period in the life of this country, he said. The events beginning Sept. 11 have tested the character of many.

"We have seen some overwhelming waves of courage. We have seen a wave of caring and understanding throughout the nation. We have seen a wave of patri-

Slaughter said he does not know what King would say about the events of Sept. 11 if he were alive .

He doesn't know how King would respond to capturing Osama bin Laden dead or alive.

He said King was a peaceful protester, but he wonders if King would still be peaceful today.

"One true thing is that King's love for America would stand today." Slaughter said.

"He once said he was not critical because he hated America. He was critical because he loved America."

To rekindle King's dream, Slaughter said Americans need to reignite a shared vision.

A community of brotherhood can only be found in a community with a shared vision.

Inevitable death

Rural America sits on death row while large cities thrive

One is a small barn with the original sod-brick walls caving in. Nearby is a one-room schoolhouse with all the windows broken out. Now it's a public housing project for barn swallows and mice.

There's also a grade school a couple miles from my house in the small town of Amy, Kan., population four, which closed before I was old enough to attend. Now, the most recent word from home is that Lincoln Primary, which offers kindergarten through third grade, is closing in Dighton, population 1,297 - and shrinking.

There's no denying it. My hometown is dying in its sleep. What is even worse is knowing there is no waking0up.

The fact that a small rural community is disappearing is nothing new. There used to be other towns in Lane County that have been replaced with wheat fields, like Cold Hill and Cheyenne. Nonetheless, it's a hard fact Dighton's population has been on a steady downward spiral, while towns like Kansas City and Wichita are busting at the seams.

According the U.S. Census Bureau, Lane County's population fell 9.3 percent from 1990 to 2000, while Johnson County's population shot through the roof at 27.1 percent.

demise? Of course it does, but there is no reversing it.

Lane County's main industry will always be agriculture, or anything related to it. There are no massive manufacturing or textile businesses there. There is no mining industry, military base, university or logging industry.

There are, however, really big wheat fields and pastures for grazing cattle. There is no sense in hoping that someone like Boeing, Ford or Microsoft will come settle in with 10,000 new job openings because our infrastructure is built for agriculture.

Other towns have crafted a future for themselves using their agricultural backbone as a reason to grow. Stanton County is Tanner Ehmke booming with the dairy farms that moved from California.

Why don't they come to Lane County? Because Stanton has more water than Lane does. Lane also has the highest property taxes in the state. There are fewer people every year supporting the local county services

Starting a new business would be financial suicide for any investor. We have taxed ourselves out of development. The solution to the town's survival existed 20 or 30 years ago, but now it's almost too late.

We should be concerned with making things better for those who will stay in rural communities in the Lifting some of the burden means consolidation, which many towns in the northwest are already doing with schools and mail routes.

Despite whatever reasons exist for the shrinking of my hometown, the passing of cultures and civilizations is a cycle that has been happening for a long time in Lane County - over a few millennia. It is evident even on my family's farm.

Take a stroll through the south pasture of my house and you'll find yourself standing on a hill that used to be an old Indian campsite.

It was the home for more than nine different cultures spanning 10,000 years.

The spear points, arrowheads and grinding stones buried underneath the grass are testimony to the fact that people used to make a living there.

Those people are gone and I don't think they are coming back.

The sun will eventually set for my hometown, too. This sunset, however, is going to be pretty hard to watch.

Wal-Mart to propose supercenter

BY MICHAEL WATSON

max Strie Collegian

Wal-Mart is back with a new supercenter proposal.

The nation's top-selling retailer will meet with the City Commission Feb. 25 to propose building a Wal-Mart Supercenter near Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Bluemont Avenue.

If the proposal is accepted by commission, construction will begin this spring, Wal-Mart Engineering Manager Art Scott said.

"Customers have been wanting the store," Scott said. "The store now is too small for Manhattan's customer base. The supercenter will have bigger aisles, more merchandise selection and grocery.'

The superstore should be completed in late winter 2003 if the proposal is accepted, he said.

Commissioner Brad Everett said he is receptive to having an additional retailer, but he needs more information to compare the costs and benefits of building a supercenter.

"I'm not opposed to it, but I need to look at all the facts." Everett said.

"I know what Wal-Mart's competition has done in other communi-

Earl Ross, Alma, Kan., said he does not support the idea of building a Wal-Mart Supercenter in Manhattan. Ross said the only reason Wal-Mart is building it is to sell food and merchandise.

"They are trying to drive Food 4 Less and others out of business," he said. "It would be nice if Manhattan needed grocery stores, but we don't, and after they get you with their low prices they will drive them back up."

Ross said Wal-Mart is too powerful and that more people should shop at Alco and Kmart. While Kmart filed for bankruptcy on Tuesday, he said the Manhattan Kmart will stay open in Manhattan. He said it is the grocery stores that Scott said the supercenter will be good for Manhattan's job market.

When upgrading from a Wal-Mart to a supercenter in markets similar to Manhattan, national trends indicate that the larger supercenters typically create 150 to 200 new jobs, he said.

The 1999 proposal, however, would have created at least 300 jobs.

In 1999, officials proposed a supercenter site on the west side of Manhattan near Fort Riley Boulevard and Seth Child Road.

Everett said there were several factors that lead to the 5-0 commission rejection to building the super-

"The original proposal was modified outside the City Commission's understanding," he said. "Plus, the neighborhood had problems with it."

Everett said there were too mar:y unanswered questions about traffic and drainage to accept the proposal, so Wal-Mart folded up and decided to begin the east-side proposal.

He has not heard the proposal and does not know how he feels about the supercenter, he said.

Scott said if the supercenter is built, the old Wal-Mart probably will not be left empty. While he could not disclose interested parties, he said there are many subleasers interested in the building.

"No deals have been made at this time," he said.

Awards given for service to minorities

Kamus State Collegian

Two students and one faculty member were awarded for outstanding service to minority students Wednesday as part of Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week.

Anita Cortez, recipient of the Commerce Bank Presidential Faculty and Staff Award for Distinguished Service to Minority Students, said she felt embarrassed when she found she was being recognized.

"I know so many people that do so much, so it seems kind of strange for me to be standing up there," Cortez said.

Cortez is the director of PILOTS, a program which helps freshmen with their first year of college and is codirector of the Developing Scholars program.

She said the main point she wants to get across to students is that hard work is instrumental to success.

"Excellence is within every student's grasp, but the road to excellence is plain old hard work - there aren't any shortcuts," Cortez said. She said her work is centered around facilitating to the students.

"The primary reason I get out of bed every day is because I love the students," Cortez said. "I love working with the students. I admire their persistence."

Four other faculty members were awarded as finalists at the ceremony: Dr. Lori Navarrete, associate professor of special education; Candice Pitts. associate director of educational administration; Waldo Berry, assistant director of distance learning; and Thirkelle Howard, dean of engineering.

Two students were awarded the Commerce Bank Presidential Student Award for Distinguished Service to Minority Students.

Louis Duncan, graduate student in accounting, shared the honors with Brad Crane, senior in electrical engineering.

Duncan is a member of Omega Psi Phi fraternity, United Black Voices, Black Student Union and the Multicultural Student Honor Society.

He said his main objective is to set a good example for students to follow.

"I just do what I think is right, and hopefully people follow my actions," Duncan said.

He said it is very important to him to set the standards for other minority students so they can relate to him and realize they can attain their goals.

Crane was nominated because of his involvement in tutoring minority students through the Multicultural Engineering Program.

His interest in tutoring started when he began helping his roommate from Bolivia, but eventually he was tutoring many other students as well.

Crane said the award was a little strange to him because he felt like he was just helping his friends.

"By helping my friends, I guess I was helping a real diverse group of people," he said.

He said the experience has had an impact on him by teaching him about different cultures.

"It's also really made me want to be a teacher just from helping people and tutoring," he said.

K-State beats Jayhawks with big 2nd half runs

BY MICHAEL NOLL

K-State used all 40 minutes of Wednesday night's game to defeat KU 72-59, but the Cats could have turned in the same result in half

K-State (18-2, 6-1) used about half of its offensive possessions, turning in quick runs of 8-2, 10-4, 8-0, and 18-2 and then shut down almost completely to allow similar runs to the Jayhawks (5-15, 0-7).

After K-State's bench players allowed AU to get within three points to end the first half. the Cats used only part of their halftime break, exiting the locker room with more than 10 minutes remaining.

Coach Deb Patterson joked that she was protecting the team from her own anger.

I was not happy at all at halftime because of the individual defensive breakdowns that we had experienced, and I was not happy with my decision at the end of the half to substitute that last 1:50 because it really changed the game," she said.

"I didn't want to take my anger at myself out on the team, so I thought I would just go outside and talk for a little while."

The lack of talking must have worked because K-State used two Laurie Koehn threepoint shots to begin the second half with a 10-0 run. Koehn attributed most of this success to the team.

"I don't think it was really anything I did,"

Koehn said. "They were wide-open looks, so it was just really good passes by teammates."

The Cats also were spurred by guard Megan Mahoney's seven assists, several of which were to forward Kendra Wecker, who finished the game with 23 points.

"Obviously Kendra was hitting, so you have to get her the ball. When shooters are on, you have to find them," Mahoney said. "We just executed offense and got good open

Despite an effective offensive performance by K-State, KU still was able to keep the game close throughout the second half. Guard KC Hilgenkamp led the Jayhawks with

The senior also hit two consecutive treys with just more than 15 minutes to play in the second half, cutting the K-State lead to four. but only scored two more points following a Cat timeout at 14:59 remaining.

"We knew that we had to stop her because she hit two three-pointers to bring the team back," senior point guard Shalondra Booker said. "So Coach called a timeout, and she told us that we had to stop her. We all went out there and played hard defense and didn't let her touch the ball as much and didn't let her penetrate or kick."

After stopping Hilgenkamp, the Cats let one of their own players take over. Kendra Wecker scored eight unanswered points in less than two minutes to help K-State finally pull away from the Hawks.

"I got a couple of easy looks on some backdoor plays, and Megan gave me some nice passes for those layups," Wecker said. "Those usually aren't too hard of baskets to

Despite those four baskets, the key to K-State's victory might have been at the foul line. The Cats made more free throws (14) than KU shot (10).

That statistic was completely opposite to K-State's loss at Oklahoma State Jan. 19, which was no coincidence, Koehn said. The Cats used that loss as motivation for the KU game.

"I think it really woke everyone up and made us all realize that if we don't rely on our system and don't do the things our coaches tell us to do, we're not going to win in this league," Koehn said.

"Maybe we'd lost our edge a little bit, and it made us more hungry to come back out and get another win."

Zach Long/Collegian

K-State freshman Kendra Wecker (53) comes up with a loose ball during the second half Wednesday at Bramlage Collseum. The forward led all scorers and rebounders with 23 points and nine rebounds, falling just one board short of her eighth double-double and one point shy of tying her career-high point total.

Wecker shines against KU; leads all scorers with 23

BY DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collogian

It might have been "Laurie Koehn Night" at Bramlage Coliseum, but Kansas players left Manhattan on Wednesday evening with Kendra Wecker's name ringing in their ears.

Kansas Coach Marian Washington's game plan was simple coming into the Jayhawks' matchup with K-State - stop Koehn's three-point mastery from burying her team early, even if it meant creating easy looks for other players.

"There were certain things we were willing to give up, some things we were trying to keep them from doing," Washington said.

What she didn't count on, however, was Wecker's presence in the Wildcats' offense.

The Marysville, Kan., product shook off a rocky shooting performance early in the game to lead the Cats with 23 points on 8-of-11 shooting, one point short of her career high.

"Kendra brought a veteran's mentality to the floor tonight," K-State Coach Deb Patterson said. "I thought Kendra earned everything she got."

Taking advantage of the Jayhawks' defensive pressure on Koehn, Wecker was a perfect 3-for-3 from beyond the three-point arc, but inside the charity stripe was where she did the bulk of the

"She's a great athlete," Washington said. "She plays very physical in the paint, and you really have to play great defense on someone like her."

Scoring wasn't the only way Wecker found to hurt the Kansas cause either. After missing two of her first three shots, the freshman began to use her strong frame to wrestle rebounds away from the taller Jayhawks and create second looks for her teammates.

"She didn't start the game making her early shots, but she made her presence known on the boards," Patterson said. "She continued to focus and stay intense and stay aggressive on the offensive end."

That was enough to keep KU's top scoring threat, K.C. Hilgenkamp, under wraps.

"Wecker did a great job. She came in, and you can tell that she's real competitive and she wants to win." Hilgenkamp said.

"She just did a great job of getting to the boards and getting to the basket."

Wecker finished with a game-high nine rebounds for the night, but it was the one that she didn't get that was the topic of conversation after the game.

"I work every game to get at least 10 rebounds, and to see nine on that sheet kind of hurts me a little bit, but that's the way it goes," Wecker said. "Other players on our team are stepping up and rebounding, and as long as we get the job done, that's all that matters."

algreens' construction benefits from favorable weather

BY TARA PATTY

Construction for Walgreens at 325 Bluemont Ave. should be completed in May, spokesperson Carol Hively said.

David Hambrick, project manager at Key Construction, said the weather has been very beneficial in the development of the building.

"We've had excellent weather, which has made progress a lot more efficient than we had expected," Hambrick said. "It's terrible for farmers, but great for construction.

The construction crew is putting structural steel on the building and should start the roof portion of the building next week, he said.

Hively said the 14,490 squarefoot Manhattan Walgreens will feature a drive-thru pharmacy and other products typical of a convenience store.

"We can fill prescriptions over the phone," Hively said, "and you can purchase anything from milk

Applications for employment will be available closer to the opening of the store in May when an employee trainer will be at the store, she said. Students are encouraged to apply.

The national chain's presence will help expand the city and attract people from outlying areas into Manhattan, said Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of "(The store) complements what we already have and provides another reason to stay in Manhattan," Butler said.

He said new, well-paying jobs created by businesses such as Walgreens in the private sector, will help balance the number of jobs held in the public sector like at K-State.

This will make Manhattan more economically stable and attractive to other businesses, he said.

Walgreens is not the only national chain interested in Manhattan.

Butler said he believed many national chains will be built in the next couple of years all over town turning Manhattan into a regional shopping destination.

But this should not pose any threat to small businesses, he said.

"A lot of small businesses have unique markets and should continue to do what they do and not try to compete," he said.

"They provide really good service and are competition in that way."

Butler said the presence of national chains within the city will prevent people from going to Topeka and Salina to shop. National chains also create traffic within the city, which he said is a good sign.

One handicap to economic development in Manhattan, he said, is the lack of land available for development.

To remedy this, the city, along with Riley County, has been planning how Manhattan will grow in the next few years, including providing land to potential businesses that is zoned and ready for develop-

The city needs to provide for its citizens, he said, and this

"We want to see growth - not wide-open and uncontrolled but good, steady growth that is low to moderate each year," Butler said.

research director of retail operations at Gartner G2, a research firm.

Murphy said just cutting back on unprofitable stores is not going to save the company. They need to find some point of focus, he said.

Burgoon said Manhattan's Kmart had good holiday sales, but the store has not been as busy as Wal-Mart and other stores. Regardless, he said he is not worried about Kmart losing customers to competition to the point of putting the store out of business.

While acknowledging the need for Kmart to close weak stores, Bert Flickinger III, managing director of Reach Marketing, a consulting firm, said he fears that Kmart runs the risk of losing its customers to competitors wanting to capture Kmart business.

Target is expected to open at least 100 stores, and Wal-Mart plans to open at least 600 stores within the next two years, he said.

Earl Ross, a resident of Alma, said he will continue to shop at Kmart and other smaller stores because Wal-Mart is too powerful.

"Kmart offers the same things maybe not as much, but they offer the same things," Ross said.

"Hopefully, they will be able to sell some of their stores and get out of the situation they are in. "More people should shop Alco,

The plan was to improve the store's flow of goods from warehouses to stores and to enhance customer service.

Conaway also cut prices on 40,000 common household products, like food, under a 'Blue Light Always' marketing campaign that drew on its popular 'Blue Light Special' promo-

The new discounts and the accompanying costs of advertising failed to produce sufficient sales to boost profits. In its fiscal third quarter, Kmart reported a net loss of $224 million.

John Walker Lindh makes 1st court appearance

The Associated Preus

ALEXANDRIA, Va. - In his first court appearance, Taliban soldier John Walker Lindh told a federal judge "Yes I do, thank you" when asked Thursday if he understood charges that he conspired to kill his fellow Americans in Afghanistan.

Lindh, wearing a green prison jumpsuit, his previously long hair and beard shorn. stood straight with his arms at his side throughout the 15-minute hearing, glancing several times to prosecutors at his right. He never turned to look at his parents, sitting two rows behind.

U.S. Magistrate Judge W. Curtis Sewell also asked Lindh whether he understood the penalties, which could include life in prison.

"Yes I do, sir," Lindh said in a quiet voice that could still be easily heard in the court-

Lindh spoke a third time when the judge asked whether he understood that he would be kept in custody until a preliminary hearing, set for Feb. 6.

'No sir, I don't have any questions," Lindh

In a sign of legal arguments to come, Lindh's attorney, James Brosnahan, told reporters after the hearing that Lindh had "asked for a lawyer, repeatedly asked for a lawyer," from early December on, "and the officials who have commented on this case

But U.S. Attorney Paul McNulty told reporters Lindh, 20, had signed a statement waiving his right to counsel when he spoke to the FBI overseas after his capture in northern Afghanistan. Defense lawyers already have said they would challenge the statement's admissibility because an attorney wasn't present. Lindh was recovering from a battle wound at the time.

"These charges are very serious," McNulty said after the hearing. "This is a matter that has the utmost gravity."

The young man's parents, who saw their son for the first time in two years during a private meeting shortly before the hearing, asserted afterward that he is innocent.

anything against America," Frank Lindh told reporters. "He is innocent of these charges."

Lindh's mother, Marilyn Walker, fought tears as she said: "It's been two years since I last saw my son. It was wonderful to see him this morning. My love for him is unconditional and absolute.

"I am grateful to God that he has been brought home to his family, me, his home and his country."

Heavy security surrounded Lindh's arrival at the federal courthouse, just a few miles from the Pentagon, which was extensively damaged in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

HOUSING HORRORS

A fire at 1418 Fairchild on Dec. 15 left a Manhattan Christian College apartment vacant. The college will demolish the apartment along with six other complexes within the year.

MCC to demolish 13 apartment complexes

BY BRYAN SCRIBNER Kaneau State Collegian

Manhattan Christian College will demolish seven of its 13 apartment complexes within the next year, a decision that has come after a recent fire and increased concerns for tenant safety. The college leases two homes in the Manhattan area, in addition to the apartment complexes. The 15 residences are spread out between 14th and 17th streets and Laramie and Fairchild. All are about 70 years

The Dec.15 attic fire at 1418 Fairchild, one of the college's apartment complexes, has left the building vacant. Vice President for Business Affairs Lori Jo Stanfield said rather than repair the damage, the school decided to destroy the building.

The college was lucky the fire occurred while its residents were on winter break, she said.

"To us, life is important, and we're certainly not going to put people at risk," she said. "We don't want someone to be home next

Over-heated electrical wiring caused the fire, which had not been replaced since the building was constructed. She said old wiring, poor plumbing and some maintenance problems exist in all of the residences. The decision to tear down some of the complexes was based on these concerns.

Demolition of about half of the complexes eliminates the need to make numerous repairs, she said.

However, the move also will mean that more than 60 residents will be forced to find another place

Not all of the residents living in the complexes are students of the college. Extra space available in the school's rentals is available to K-State students.

MCC drops ministry music major; 18 students affected

BY SARAH BAHARI

Kanaas State Collegian

Eighteen students are without majors and two professors have lost their jobs after Manhattan Christian College restructured its music program. In a memo written to the students last week, Randy Ingmire, vice president for academic affairs, said the music ministries major will become a minor in worship. "Decisions are difficult when lives are disrupted," Ingmire said in the letter. "But, firmly believe it is the right time to change directions in our music program."

-- Churches have changed, he said. Instead of formal choirs and organs, churches are opting for more contemporary, informal services.

"It's what churches desire now," he said. "The decision is one that will benefit students in the long run."

Ingmire said he has met with more than half of the music majors to discuss their

A couple students are only a few hours short and still can graduate with a music degree, he said. Others will work for a general Bible degree and minor in worship. Some plan to transfer.

Shannon Moore, senior in music ministries, is one of the few who will graduate in May. She said the decision came as a surprise.

"Shock, and then sadness," Moore said. "I'll be done, so it happened at just the right time for me.

She said administrators didn't mention it beforehand because they didn't want rumors flying around.

At first, Moore said she disagreed with the decision, but has since changed her

"I think it was a wise decision for MCC," she said. "Maybe not for other Christian colleges, though."

Greg LaFollette, sophomore in music ministries, has not decided what to do. He said he is leaning toward transferring to K-State's music department.

"I was a little bit angry, a little shocked," LaFollette said. "I was in disbelief. I didn't know what I was supposed to do, what they expected me to do.

"I'm more at peace now because I have to be. There's no point in dwelling on it." He said officials didn't explain the decision well enough. "In my opinion, they didn't supply any good reason," he said. He said he was told the money could be better used. The music department had three teachers for only 18 students - a much lower student/teacher ratio than in other departments. Ingmire said funding had nothing to do with the decision.

Renee Wells, senior in family counseling, majored in music her first year of school. She said she was upset by the

"I feel like we're losing a lot of talent." Only one music ministries professor has been asked to continue in his position. Ian Coleman was asked to direct the worship program, but has not made a decision. Ruby Ann Poulson and Laurie Forsberg will not have their contracts renewed at the end Ingmire said it was unfortunate, but the restructuring offered only one position.

"Their productivity and performance has been most positive," he said.

Coleman said he was concerned that students would miss out on opportunities.

Proposal to alter flight certificates

BY EDIE HALL

Kansas State Collegian

Aviation officials at the national level are proposing to add photo identification to pilot flight certificates.

The flight certificates currently provide information regarding the ratings pilots have obtained and the aircraft they are able to fly, along with their names, addresses and other biographical information.

The recommendation to alter the certificates was brought up when a group of national organizations met to discuss reducing domestic security risks pertaining to general aviation.

The new certificates would include a photo of the pilot and be harder to counterfeit.

Barney King, head of the professional pilot section of the College of Technology and Aviation at K-State-Salina, said currently there is not a way to positively identify pilots.

"We have photo identification on everything else," King said. "It would make sense to have them on our pilot's licenses."

Although the Sept. 11 attacks have caused increases in security around the United States, less action was needed by K-State-Salina's College of Technology and Aviation.

King said the college updated their security system the previous summer. Improvements included an ID card that pilots must have to unlock doors to the ramp and the flight operations

Fired Enron auditor won't testify in case

BY H. JOSEF HEBERT

WASHINGTON, D.C., - Fired Enron outside auditor David Duncan refused to testify to Congress on Thursday about the shredding of the energy company's documents, invoking his Fifth Amendment protection against selfincrimination.

His silence came as his former colleagues, top officials of the Arthur Andersen accounting firm, sought to lay the blame on him. Their denials of involvement in the shredding drew skepticism from members of a House panel investigating Enron's collapse.

Duncan, who had been Andersen's lead auditor on the Enron account, was the first witness before the House Energy and Commerce's investigations and oversight subcommittee.

"Enron robbed the bank, Arthur Andersen provided the getaway car and they say you were at the wheel," the subcommittee chairman Rep. Jim Greenwood, R-Pa., told Duncan.

But when Greenwood began to question Duncan, asking him if he had given an order to destroy documents to subvert governmental investigations, Duncan cited his constitutional right to silence. He was not questioned further and was excused.

Dorsey Baskin Jr., managing director of Andersen's professional standards group, told the panel that Duncan directed the destruction of documents just as an investigation was beginning.

Andersen lawyer Nancy Temple denied repeatedly that an Oct. 12 e-mail she wrote helped trigger the wave of document destruction.

The efforts by Baskin and other Andersen officials to deflect the full blame on Duncan for the shredding drew criticism from some subcommittee members. As the meeting concluded five hours after it began, Greenwood told the Anderson officials, "We may have to have you back. At the end of the day here we still don't have evidence to suggest that Mr. Duncan, who did not testify, is a rogue employee of Anderson."

Trial for 2 administrators scheduled for March 15

A trial for two K-State administrators facing misdemeanor drug charges will begin March 15.

Reginland McGowan, assistant vice president of educational and personal development programs, and Renee Freeman, director of GEAR UP II (Gaining Early Awareness and Readiness for Undergraduate Programs II), are charged with possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia.

Through GEAR UP, both McGowan and Freeman also work with Junction County Middle School administrators.

McGowan and Freeman were arrested in Junction City Aug. 24, and their trial was set Thursday at the Geary County District Court.

Breadbasket needs groups to volunteer for food drive

Volunteers from school and church groups are needed for the seventh annual Souper Bowl Sunday food drive.

The food drive, headed by Riley County attorney Bill Kennedy, is sponsored by the Flint Hills Breadbasket and centers around Super Bowl Sunday.

"The political part of me said, 'Wow. Everything's there. We have places to collect the cans, a place to distribute the cans and a football game providing the publicity," said Kennedy.

The cans will be collected from Jan. 31 to Feb. 3, with Saturday soup collections in front of the west Dillon's location. Kennedy said just about every church in Manhattan also will be collecting cans. Monetary donations will be accepted.

Agroterrorism conference set for March in Manhattan

TOPEKA - Agriculture advocates, producers, researchers and consumers were invited Wednesday to what organizers are calling the state's first comprehensive conference on agroterrorism since the Sept. 11 attacks.

The Koch Crime Institute, Department of Agriculture and K-State announced that the Midwest Conference on Agriculture Bioterrorism will be in Manhattan on March 25-26, Jerry Wells, executive director of the crime institute, said he expects about 300 people to attend. The gathering will be open to residents of other states.

He said the state economy's dependence on agriculture more than justified the conference, which organizers intend to make an annual event.

Pa. school bus, children found after 6-hour search

LANDOVER HILLS, Md. - A school bus driver with a shotgun took 11 children on a more than 100-mile odyssey Thursday that ended when he was arrested by an off-duty officer who saw the youngsters waving frantically from the windows.

What the driver was intending to do was not immediately clear. None of the children were hurt.

The bus picked up the students, ages 6 through 16, at Oley Valley High School in Oley, Pa., between 7:30 and 7:45 a.m. for the six-mile trip to the Berks Christian School in Birdsboro, Pa. The bus never arrived and school officials could not raise the bus by radio.

After a frantic, six-hour search the bus was found 160 miles away, parked outside a discount store in Landover Hills near Washington.

The driver, identified as Otto Nuss, had a shotgun when the bus was found, Pennsylvania state police trooper Raymond Albert said.

ATTACK DEVELOPMENTS

- President Bush called Wednesday for nearly $50 billion in additional military spending for the war on terrorism, the largest increase for the Pentagon in two decades.
- In the southern Afghanistan province of Helmand, U.S. special forces troops and their Afghan allies confiscated about 2,000 weapons Wednesday.
- Officials on Wednesday postponed bringing other detainees from Afghanistan to Cuba until investigators finish questioning the camp's 158 inmates.
- Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge assured mayors Wednesday that his anti-terrorism plan will include provisions to help cities shoulder some - but not anywhere near all - the costs of additional police officers, equipment and training.

Q: I recently moved out of my fraternity after living there for three years. They want me to pay $400 to park in the house lot. What are my alternatives to this gross misuse of authority?

- Broke greek guy

He said:

Being a greek, I understand your predicament. My fraternity wants an obscene amount of my money also.

I would advise you to buy a parking permit, but unless you are on campus by 8 a.m., good luck.

If I were you, I would lead a boycott of the out-of-house guys and not do anything for your fraternity.

No eating, no parking, no sports. I am not saying greek life is bad, but sometimes the younger guys need a little reality check to keep their heads from floating away. Make a counter offer of $75 to park. Settle on a final price of no more than $150.

If you and your older brothers can unionize and not cross the picket lines, you will park there successfully by the end of February. The fraternity will want your company, and most importantly need your hard-earned money.

The last alternative is to park there and make them tow you. Trust me, it takes more than two hours to get a car towed. It would take a very motivated fraternity officer to waste that much time harassing an elder.

Derek Dietz is a senior in milling

Unfortunately, you are not alone in this never-ending battle for the almighty dollar.

I can relate to your predicament because my sorority's parking spots are based on GPA, and I have yet to park there legally. Weigh the costs of parking in the lot. If a ticket and a reaming from a power-hungry officer is all you will get, then don't sweat it.

I would advise you to talk to someone in charge. Have a word with the president and try to work something out...

You also could work out a plan with an in-house member to let you know when your car is about to be towed.

Four hundred dollars is a high price to pay for a slab of concrete, so keep an eye on where your money goes. If your chapter officers buy new cars or travel more, then red flags should go up and you can start pointing fingers.

If this bothers you, decide how important remaining in your chapter is to you. If you find that the benefits outweigh the cost, find another place to park. If not, count your friends, cut your losses and move on.

Candidates reveal intentions

BY MICHAEL LAWRENCE

Kansae State Collegian

The spring 2002 race for student body presidency began Thursday at Gilligan's Bar and

The first candidates, Ali Karimi, senior in social science, and Eric Hoopingarner, junior in mass communications, officially announced their intention to run.

Karimi, arts and sciences senator, will run for president and Hoopingarner, also known as 'The Hoop' on KSDB-FM 91.9, will run for vice president.

Karimi and Hoopingarner said they will run their campaign based on three ambitions setting up a textbook exchange for students on the internet, establishing two university television stations and setting up a program allowing live performances from famous musicians and comedians.

Karimi and Hoopingarner said they would like to see more students vote this year. However, they said they expect a better turnout this year because they intend to make everyone on campus aware of their platform and the benefits it promises students.

"People don't vote because people don't know," Karimi said.

This is Karimi's third time participating in the student body presidential elections.

"I'd say we have a really good shot at winning," Hoopingarner said. "People cannot ignore the

They said they would like to see a more culturally diverse ballot this year.

"Everybody should run," Karimi said. "We want them all." Karimi said he has run his previous campaigns spending very little money and he said he expects to do the same again this During his term in Student Senate, Karimi said, he fought successfully to lower how much money student body presidential candidates can spend on campaigning.

"Spending three grand is a little too much," Karimi said.

Bryan Schroeder, senior in music composition, supports the candidates' campaign.

"They're great candidates and I think they should win," he said.

Matt Jolly, senior in public relations, said he was a supporter of Karimi last year and expects to repeat it.

Karimi and Hoopingarner have realistic goals for K-State, he said, because their goals are simple and easy to accomplish. He also said the two are worthy of candidacy because of their concern for students.

"They care more for students." he said. "They don't just want to impress the faculty.

All in all, he said, Karimi and Hoopingarner are average people.

"That's the kind of thing we need for president and vice president for a change," he said.

Miss Rodeo Kansas serves as advocate, ambassador for sport

BY EDIE HALL

Kansas State Collegian

The first duty of Miss Rodeo Kansas is being a positive advocate and ambassador for the sport of rodeo. Valerie Wurtz, junior in animal science and pre-veterinary medicine, said she doesn't take this duty lightly.

Wurtz was crowned Miss Rodeo Kansas on Aug. 2, 2001, in Dodge City. She was considered a lady-inwaiting until Jan. 2, when her official reign as Miss Rodeo Kansas

Wurtz said to compete for Miss Rodeo Kansas, she had to prepare and give a three-minute speech on the state of Kansas. She was judged on appearance and impromptu questions among other things. She also took a 100 point test over rodeo and the history of rodeo, and went through several interviews.

"We were really judged on our public relations ability," Wurtz said. They needed to know how well we could work with people, since that's a big part of the job.'

Wurtz said as Miss Rodeo Kansas, she will work with children in various groups such as grade schools, youth camps and Bible camps. She also will travel to different rodeos around the state and help with whatever they need.

"A rodeo queen serves the people and the rodeo," Wurtz said. "It isn't a stereotypical queen position."

Wurtz, the daughter of Bruce and Julie Wurtz, is from Riley, Kan. She also has served as Miss Rodeo K-State.

She said she became interested in rodeo at age 17.

"I kind of followed my brother into it," Wurtz said. "He's an amateur bull rider."

The annual Miss Rodeo Kansas Coronation Ball takes place at 6 p.m. Saturday in the Blue Hills Room in the Blue Hills Shopping Center.

Donita Whitney-Bammerlin, who is helping coordinate the coronation, said this is an event Miss Rodeo Kansas hosts to thank her supporters and celebrate. Also, the coronation ball kicks off the year's activities.

It will include a barbecue dinner, a silent and live auction, the coronation and a dance.

Tickets cost $10 and can be purchased at Manhattan area businesses.

Those students will be entering the housing market used by K-State students. This will only make the housing search harder for students. More people will increase competition for living space.

The college took responsibility by deciding to tear down the complexes, but they should go the next step and provide new housing for students instead of creating a burden on Manhattan's housing market.

Professionals' use of marijuana shouldn't overshadow success

What makes anyone think that Reginland McGowan and Rence Freeman are the only two administrators who smoke marijuana?

I know quite a few professors and other faculty and staff that partake in this illicit activity. When I was attending the University of Illinois, I even knew a law professor that occasionally used marijuana.

Throughout my years, I've met doctors, lawyers, scientists, teachers, business people, police officers, preachers, politiclans, civil servants - all of whom are professionals, well-respected in their fields, productive members of society, many excellent parents and all smokers of marijuana.

We've heard the arguments about how marijuana is no worse than or perhaps not as bad as smoking cigarettes or drinking alcohol. But regardless of the ill effects from the consumption of cigarettes and alcohol, we as members of a free society have chosen that the pleasurable experiences many receive from the moderate use of these substances is worth the toleration of their detrimental consequences.

Following the same logic, with consideration to the number of people who use marijuana and its no-so-ill effects, it goes against reason that marijuana remains stigmatized.

If McGowan and Freeman are excellent administrators, is it not more detrimental to society if they lose their jobs then was their act of smoking marijuana in the first place?

The ostensible purpose of underage drinking laws is to prevent young people from making unwise decisions.

Micah Hawkinson

The reasoning is thus: if we protect them from themselves until they can make wise decisions, they won't act stupid when they finally get access to alcohol.

Despite regulations forbidding distribution of alcohol to minors, nine out of 10 high school sophomores have access to alcohol, and the majority of high school students drinks regularly, according to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

It doesn't work.

If figures are that large in high school, I don't have to tell you how much higher they are in college, when young people get away from their parents' influence.

Quite simply, underage drinking laws are ineffective and make the law a laughingstock.

Such laws are very difficult to enforce. For instance, there is nothing to stop an older student from buying alcohol for his younger roommate, especially if the roommate drinks it at home.

The inability of police to punish all violators of the underage drinking statutes makes these laws meaningless. Sporadic enforcement of any law will lead people to disrespect - and eventually disregard - that law.

The law subsequently loses all power to do what it was intended to do. It becomes a mechanism for making a few people pay for something that most people get away with.

Underage drinking is ridiculously overpunished. In effect, MIPs assess a fine to those who are arbitrarily judged to be too young to enjoy adult beverages.

So how could we stop teens from making dumb decisions about alcohol without these laws? If no legal code prevents young people from drinking themselves into stupors, what will prevent them?

The best solution is self-control. Parents should train their children to make wise decisions about what they take into their bodies.

Don't get me wrong: I am not advocating that young children should be fed moderate amounts of Jack and Coke to teach them how to drink responsibly. A better place to start would be with candy. Parents should encourage their children to refrain from eating too much candy, from drinking too much soda and from eating too many other sweets. It should be compulsory at first, until the children are capable of reason. Then, parents should discuss the consequences of eating too much unhealthy food. In the same way, parents should take the time to sit down with their kids and talk about alcohol and other In the end, this system would produce more discerning young people who were able to think outside of simple do or don't parameters. Decisions about alcohol and drugs should not be government-regulated. Individuals should be informed about the consequences of filling their bodies with toxins and act accordingly. People should make their own decisions and take responsibility for their own actions.

In attempting to force people to do what the government considers to be the right thing, underage drinking laws offer an artificial solution for simple lack of self-

The point is to try to make everything as easy as possible," McGraw said, "Hopefully, everyone will be willing to try these recipes at home."

Andrea Weir, junior in family studies and human services, said she enjoyed the third class in November that featured different types of sauces. She said she plans to come back for the next class in order to learn more recipes.

"I thought it would be fun to learn how to cook and prepare a few types of dishes," Weir said. "This was the first time I tasted French onion soup."

Trisha Cash of the Kansas 4-H Foundation said she went to previous classes and already has prepared meals she learned from the class.

"Everything is so easy to follow. I made a wonderful pasta salad at home, and I loved it," Cash said.

McGraw said he enjoys hearing about the progress from his guests who attend the class.

"One of our die-hards showed up at the first class with horror stories about cooking," McGraw said. "Now he's experimenting with different types of recipes and everything. I even received an invitation to a dinner party he held."

McGraw said college students don't need a fancy kitchen to cook for themselves.

"I didn't do the meal plan in college," he said. "You can absolutely cook in a dorm room."

Hawks sure to fall short

There's nothing I love more than KU men's basketball losing a game.

Watching the Iowa State/Kansas game Wednesday night, I cheered the Cyclones on until I was blue in the face. The Jayhawks still managed to pull out the victory, but my purpose was anything but defeated.

My built-up animosity for KU men's basketball didn't generate overnight,

Derek Boss

though. Oh, no, my friend. This indignation began long before I was even able to understand the in-state rivalry between K-State and Kansas. You should see pictures of me at age 1,

You should see pictures of me at age 1, sitting comfortably in my baby seat with Wildcat sweat pants and a matching T-shirt. I guess the purple was just instilled in me early on.

Plus, with my parents both graduates of K-State (the good 'ol class of '73), I developed quite an interest in Wildcat sports. I'd sit there with my dad, Indianstyle in my living room, listening to playby-play of football and basketball games.

Years later, my parents began taking me to events. I remember watching Askia Jones score 62 points against Fresno State in the NIT Tournament in 1994, and the football team trouncing opponents by 60 points in its early season schedule.

And with that love for K-State athletics, I grew a cold heart toward the people of Lawrence. Well, not the people, per se, but the idiotic imbeciles that have "Rock Chalk Jayhawk" as the ringer to their cell phones.

Now, I don't have much problem with KU athletics other than basketball. The layhawks' football program is terrible, so it's not much fun rooting against them—they lose just about every game. And as far as the rest of the sports are concerned, I really just don't care.

But basketball is different.

KU gets some of the best recruiting talent in the nation, and the team is in the preseason Top 10 every year. Yet, Roy Boys' club has a fair-weather fan base like no other school. In fact, the state of Kansas, as a whole, is terrible at this.

You hear all these people saying how they're K-State fans during football season, Kansas supporters for basketball, and Wichita State fans in baseball.

How pathetic is that?

A true fan supports a program through thick and thin — not merely following a program's bandwagon of success.

Jumping back to KU basketball, though, I just can't stand the chickenhawks and their arrogant disposition. They get tons of McDonald's All-Americans each year, but they all get big heads in a matter of months—even when they choke year-in and year-out in the NCAA Tournament.

Just look at Drew Gooden.

If I had one KU player to despise, it would be this character. Yeah, he's leading the Big 12 in scoring and rebounding, and he's probably the most athletic big man in the league, but he lets his mouth get the best of him.

Last year, Gooden told the press he had the tools and skills to be better than Michael Jordan. Gimme a break — and get off the caffeine pills, buddy.

Jordan is the best player ever to play the game, and those type of naive comments

Eight years ago, Austra Skujyte had a decision to make. Skujyte, from Birzai, Lithuania, was given two options—basketball or track.

"We only had two sports in my hometown," said Skujyte. "Basketball and track, I tried both of them." But she only fell in love with one. Skujyte chose track and has reaped the benefits ever since.

Several years after that decision, Skujyte competed for her home country in the 2000 Olympics Games in Sydney, Australia. She didn't play on the basketball team. Instead, she placed 12th in the heptathlon.

At the 2001 World Championships, she won the shot put and finished sixth in the heptathlon. That same year she began competing with the K-State track team, and quickly became the first Wildcat ever to capture a NCAA championship when she placed first in the heptathlon.

K-State track and field coach Cliff Rovelto still remembers seeing Skujyte compete for the first time.

"I saw her compete in Sydney, and obviously anyone who is there is pretty good," he said. "She's a special athlete and a special person."

When Skujyte came to K-State for the first time last January, she already had a wealth of international experience, not to mention respect. But that didn't stop Rovelto from trying to do what perhaps seemed nearly impossible — make her better.

"After I first saw her, I was excited," he said. "But there were some holes in her training, I knew if we could fill in some of those holes, she was going to improve significantly."

Rovelto was right. During the past year, he said, Skyjyte has increased her shot put throw by more than five feet.

"Five feet is pretty remarkable," he said. "She has made improvements in a lot of areas, and I think she will continue to make improvements."

On Jan. 19, Skujyte destroyed the indoor women's pentathlon record. She scored more than 120 points, and completely dominated the field by winning four of the five events and only taking second in the other event.

"It felt great," she said. "I didn't know the score of the record before, and it wasn't until afterwards that I even realized I had broken it."

Her success on the field has brought Skujyte added attention. She has assumed a leadership role on the team

It's not just another track meet this weekend for the K-State track and field team. This meet is different.

Saturday the squad enters into the KSU-KU-MU Triangular squaring off against two of the teams arch rivals. Well aware of the significance of competing against rivals, Coach Cliff Royelto said he is confident his team will meet the challenge.

"If we do what we're capable of doing, we will win this meet," Rovelto said. "We don't lose this meet, aside from conference and national championships, this is the most important meet of the year for our team and for our institution."

The Triangular marks the third consecutive weekend the Cats have had the luxury of competing at Ahearn Field House since their return to action following winter break.

Events will get underway 11 a.m. Saturday with the start of the field events. The running events will begin at 2 p.m., starting with the

The winner of the Triangular claims the jug, a traveling trophy. The winner is decided by combining both the points from the men's and women's competitions. By observing international scoring rules, only tabulating two placers from each team, the totals should be kept close throughout the

The weekend's competition also will double as a charity event for the Riley County Police Department.

Each athlete, staff member and fan attending the meet will have the opportunity to donate a teddy bear to the RCPD. The bears will be used to help calm children involved in emergencies and accident scenes.

The next two weekends will take K-State away from Ahearn, before returning for a final tuneup for the Big 12 Championships. The Championships will on Feb. 22 and 23 in Lincoln, Neb.

The K-State women's basketball team will jump straight from the frying pan into the fire Sunuay.

The No. 11 Cats (18-2, 6-1) will face No. 12 Texas Tech (12-5, 4-3) at 2 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum. K-State hasn't beaten Tech since 1997.

This season, the Lady Raiders feature one of the league's best guards, sophomore Jia Perkins, and a backcourt that can Perkins averages 16.2 points per game, sophomore guard Natalie Ritchie scores 12.1 points per game and senior guard Amber Tarr adds 11.9 points per game. Additionally, freshman center Cisti Greenwalt, who grabs nearly eight rebounds a game, and sophomore forward Jolee Ayers have also played well in the paint.

"We will have our hands full against a great Texas Tech team. They have incredible perimeter shooters in Ritchie and Tarr." Coach Deb Patterson said.

"And Jia Perkins, I think, is one of the best guards in the country. Inside, Ayers and Greenwalt are doing a tremendous job. I feel like they're a team that can score from five positions when they're on their game. We're going to have to defend at a very high level, and that's the challenge between the next three days — tighten up that defense."

Against Kansas on Wednesday, K-State played spotty defense, forcing the Jayhawks into turnovers at times while "We've really shown spurts of playing some great basketball and have done some very, very good things, but we've got to continue to build upon that."

Overall, spottiness has been the keyword for K-State the past two games. At Oklahoma State Jan. 19, the Cats struggled to play aggressive against a fired up Cowgirl squad. Then, against KU, K-State fixed that problem but struggled defensively.

However, in both games, the team also played very well at times.

"We've got a lot of improving we've got to continue to do. We've really shown spurts of playing some great basketball and have done some very, very good things, but we've got to continue to build upon that," Patterson said.

"We're a long way from being where I'll hope we'll be a game from now and three games from now. You've got to have that sense of building a consistent presence on

For the second straight game, the Cats will have the home crowd on their side.

The game already is sold out, which can only help the team play better, senior guard Shalondra Booker said.

"The fans play a major factor. They keep us hyped on the bench. They keep our intensity level up," Booker said. "Every time they cheer, we do something excellent on the floor. They start going crazy, then our bench starts going crazy, then the girls on the floor start going crazy and they continue to go on these runs.

"Basically, we love our fans, and as the crowds continue to get bigger, we're going to continue to give them what they want."

Local show mixes modern, traditional styles

BY COURTNEY DUFFIELD

Changing perceptions of quilt making, the new show at the Manhattan Arts Center combines contemporary and traditional quilting for one show.

Quilters of all kinds viewed a gallery display of various quilt styles at the arts center. The exhibit began with a public reception Jan. 12, and will run through March 3.

"It went really well. Quilters came out of the woodwork," Carole Chelz, arts center volunteer, said. "If you say the word quilt, then quilters will come."

Terri Lee, executive director of the arts center, said there are 46 quilts on display by the Kansas Art Quilters, an organization in Kansas that started January 2001. She also said the public reception was

'It was a large gathering, about 50 quilters and 50 others to see the gallery," Lee said.

Smaller quilt works also are on display at the Manhattan Arts Center. This one by Harriette Janke of Manhattan is titled "America: A Mosalc, Not a Melting Pot."

exhibit. The front part features quilts by two Manhattan quilters: Nancy Graves and Judi Robb. They are both co-owners of Robb-N-Graves, a quilting design business.

They were trying to show that someone can make a business out of quilting, just as we have," Robb said

The quilts displayed give the public an idea of the kinds of quilt designs their business offers. Chelz said they design, manufacture and sell

"We have been doing it since 1997," Graves said. "We do patterns, and ours are the ones you can see in the window of the Quilt Shop.'

Both Graves and Robb are members of the Konza Prairie Quilters Guild. Graves said the organization meets monthly and has about 100 members. They have a business meeting, lecture and sometimes a workshop.

Graves said she and Robb have a more traditional style of quilting. She also said there are two basic types of quilts: ones that are appliqué and ones that are Piece means the pieces of material are patched together to make a quilt, and appliqué is when a pattern design, such as a heart, is put on top of another fabric. All of their quilts on display are appliqué.

"There may be a dozen of our quilts on display," Graves said. "Basically, we do traditional patterns, like your grandma did."

Graves said she and Robb are constantly working on quilts to take to the International Quilters Markets. They take between six and eight quilts to each of the markets which take place twice a year.

Graves said this year the May market will be in Kansas City. The quilts Graves and Robb take to the market can take from six weeks to three months to make.

One of Graves' quilts on display called 'Summer Loving" won third place at the International Quilt Show in Houston, Texas, in November 2001.

"It was all done by hand and appliqued," Graves said. "They have a panel of judges. Most major quilt shows have three internationally known judges. Sometimes you get a critique back so you can improve."

The second part of the gallery, which is in the back, offers a more contemporary view of quilting. Chelz said there were many creative quilts, such as ones where the person took a picture and put it on fabric and used it to make their quilt.

"Between the two galleries they are going to see both ends of quilting," Graves said.

"It shows what people are doing. It lets people know that whether they are contemporary or traditional there is something for them."

Robb said the reaction to the quilt gallery was a very positive one. "People respond to quilts. Most people know someone who quilts, like a grandma. It brings up memories of home," Robb said. "People always seem to enjoy looking at quilts."

Chelz said the arts center tries each year to have some show of display of quilts for the public to view. It gives them an idea of what is out there in the world of quilting.

Alumni display ceramics in Aggieville business

BY ADAM LEE

Kansas State Collegian

Two K-State alumni are being exhibited at Urban Designs as part of the "Indiana University: Bloomington Invitational Exhibit."

Jared Janovec is a K-State graduate who is now attending the fine arts graduate school in Bloomington. His 'Harvest Series' of ceramics, containing the pieces "Anomaly," "Gourd Trepanation" and "Transformation" are on display in working with Urban Design's Deborah

Urban Designs' Moro Street window.

The idea for the show, which runs until Feb. 2, sprung from Janovec Minner during the summer on "Returning to the Apple," an exhibition of work by K-State alumni. Janovec proposed to Minner the idea of featuring the work of some of his colleagues in Indiana.

Minner agreed to the show, seeing it as an opportunity to show art from one of the most prominent programs in the country.

"Getting work from there is really nice," Minner said, "The quality of work is very unique."

Minner also saw the show as a chance to display the art of another K-State graduate, Jon Radermacher. After leaving Manhattan, Radermacher received his master's degree from Indiana University and is now a member of the faculty in Bloomington.

Along with Radermacher's contribution of "Hall of Divinities," a threedimensional form of copper, acrylic and stainless steel came the incorporation of pieces from other Indiana faculty into the show.

The exhibition features contemporary and traditional ceramics, metalsmithing, printmaking and paintings. Minner said she sees the show as a good way for K-State art students to expose themselves to techniques and styles that they might not be aware of. "They're doing a lot of innovative things with materials, and I think it's good to see what's going on at other universities," Minner said.

"We still need to make sure students' voices are out there," Barker said. "We can't fund the entire increase solely on tuition. He said the administrators' proposal to the Kansas Board of Regents will be ready in the next eight weeks and senators should be listening for student feedback.

Student senators allocated Black Student Union $1,000 for its annual trip to the Big 12 Conference on black student government.

A new regulation limited organizations from asking for more than $1,000 for traveling expenses to allow more events to come to the K-State campus, John O'Hara, allocations committee chair, said.

Maurice Parks, BSU president, said the new regulation forced his organization to find other ways to generate funds for its trip, which will cost the group a total of $10,000.

"I wish we could have gotten a little more," Parks said. "It really hinders a lot of things. I am pretty sure we can find other ways to come up with money."

Student senators also allocated $3,200 to Campus Crusade for Christ to pay for Gene McConnell to speak about issues related to pornography and sexual addiction in McCain Auditorium on Feb. 5.

O'Hara said the event could potentially involve 1,800 students.

"It could be one of the largest student events we've had all year," he said.

With elections nearing, faculty representative Bill Muir asked senators to encourage as many people as possible to run for office.

"We've got to stir some increased interest in running for office," Muir

He said the more people involved in running, the more students will be interested in issues and candidates.

The filing deadline for all positions is Feb. 12. Election packets are available in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union.

In other action, Matt Wolters, senate chair, swore in new senators Seth Bridges for the College of Arts and Sciences, and Damian Lair and Tanner Klingzell for the College of Business Administration.

Also, John Graham was appointed as assistant to the attorney general.

custody because of the risk that he would try to flee and because of his potential danger to the community. Sewell granted the request.

Brosnahan told the judge that Lindh did not learn the precise charges against him until the day before.

Sewell then set the Feb. 6 hearing to determine whether Lindh would continue to be held in custody.

Lindh faces four charges, according to the government's criminal complaint.

Those are engaging in a conspiracy to kill Americans in Afghanistan, providing material support and resources to foreign terrorist organizations, engaging in prohibited transactions with the Taliban and providing goods and services to and for the benefit of the Lindh was captured in November near the northern Afghan city of Mazar-e-Sharif after an uprising by Taliban and al-Qaeda prisoners

An American CIA operative, Johnny "Mike" Spann, was killed during the uprising.

Lindh left his country two years ago to study Arabic and Islam in Yemen, and then apparently went to Pakistan and from there to Afghanistan.

The government's case against Lindh is built around a criminal complaint based mainly on his interviews with the FBI on Dec. 9 and 10 and statements he made in a television interview.

a different situation than most other flight schools, security wasn't such a main issue.

"All the students that have been admitted to flight school have already been through a screening process," King said. "Once they get in, we know that they've been checked out. It's not like people can walk in off the street and take

Dennis Kuhlman, dean of the College of Technology and Aviation, said that because of unannounced inspections by the Federal Aviation Administration, K-State-Salina is in a constant state of updating their security.

Kuhlman said the main objective of K-State-Salina is providing a safe learning environment for students while ensuring an unrestrained

"We have to balance those two elements," Kuhlman said. "I think we do that very well."

"I'm worried we won't be able to serve students as well with one teacher," he said.

It is too early to tell if the restructuring will be beneficial, he said.

"Change is change, and it involves us having to rethink the way we do things."

In the last 10 years, about 110 students have been enrolled in the music ministries program, Ingmire said. Seventeen have graduated - a 16 percent completion rate.

"There are probably similar numbers at K-State," he said. "Music is an extremely difficult program." There is now a little more than 400 students at MCC.

Ingmire said the decision has been difficult for students.

"They've gone through the full range of emotions, and rightfully so," he said. "Several have been upset. Several have said they understand.

"It's never a good time to make a decision like this."

HOUSING

an expanded student center will replace the rental complexes. This construction, though, will not occur for about the next five years. The spaces will remain vacant during that period.

Tim McDaniels, a junior at Manhattan Christian College, lives in one of the apartment complexes. He said his complex has plumbing and electrical problems. Most of the residence is in poor condition, he said.

Stanfield said the college has annual code inspections. All maintenance problems, too, are handled by the college or hired contractors, she said. Residents also are notified of the dangers of lead paint that might exist in some of the apartments.

McDaniels said rental rates are an advantage of the apartment. He said the nine people living in his complex pay $100 each per month.

Stanfield said the low rates are made available because the college is not in the business of renting. She said basic maintenance and codes are complied with, but there is no emphasis on appearance. The focus is to provide inexpensive housing that also is close to the college's

"We do not require students to live here or anywhere else," she said. "One of the issues that students have is the balance between what I can afford to rent and the quality of the building.

Donald Francis, assistant fire chief for the Manhattan Fire Department, said the decision to tear down the old buildings is economically beneficial. Francis said most of the residences are meeting minimum standards.

"On our part, we'll always take a building that's up to today's standards," he said. "There are a couple of those buildings that need to be updated.

He said he hopes the plan will work for the college.

"They've got a good outlook for their campus," he said. "It's just a matter of money."

The Manhattan Christian College has existed since 1927. About one-third of its students, Stanfield said, are taking classes at K-State or working toward bachelor's degrees at both the university and Christian college. The college offers degrees in Christian ministry fields.

a role she didn't really expect to have earlier this season.

"I really didn't feel like it before, but people keep telling me that I am."

Rovelto said she really isn't a talkative leader, rather she leads by example. When she practices, others practice harder to keep up with her, he said. Royelto said she really helps motivate the team.

"Those who train with her really just get pulled along," Rovelto said.

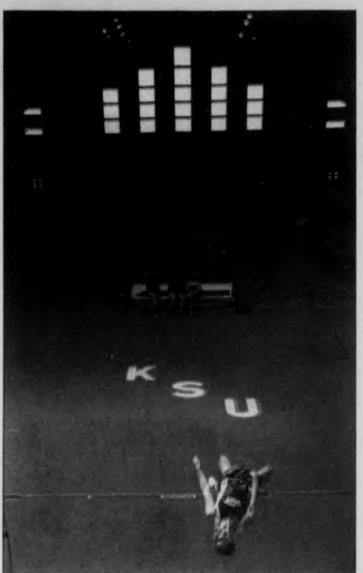

Perhaps the magic that Skujyte displays on the field lies not in her athletic ability, but in her approach to the sport.

When she stepped onto the field Saturday, she had no idea she was about to set a NCAA record. She didn't even take the time to realize it was a possibility until after it had happened.

Coach Rovelto applauds her work ethic and commended her for being a wonderful person to be around.

"She has a real passion for the sport and a tremendous work ethic," he said.

"I think she could do it and absolutely love it no matter what benefits came her way. She is simply a delightful person to be around, and it is her character that is her best trait."

K-State men to take on Tigers

BY DEREK BOSS

Kansas State Collegian

Matt Siebrandt vividly recalls K-State's trip to Columbia, Mo.,

His two free throws gave the Cats a five-point lead with 1:29 to play, but Missouri ended the game on a 9-0 run to escape with a 70-66 come-from-behind

It was a loss Siebrandt said was particularly difficult to swallow.

"That was a real tough game to lose," he said. "Up five with a minute and half left, and we gave

But K-State seems accustomed to giving it away at the Hearnes

Center. The purple have lost 17 straight at Mizzou's home arena, with its last win on March 2, 1985. Yet, Coach Jim Wooldridge knows better than to dwell on the past, as K-State (7-9, 1-4) gets set for a rematch with the Tigers (14-5, 4-2) in Columbia.

"It's such a different set of circumstances from one year to the next, and I would just have to disregard anything that happened down the stretch," he said.

"I think what we really need to concentrate on is what we have to do to be a better basketball team as we face Missouri on Saturday.

"That's the quest. That's the challenge for us - not what happened a week ago, a month ago, or a year ago - but what are we going to have to do now to be a better team.

This will be the second meeting of the season between K-State and Mizzou. The then-No. 17 Tigers defeated the Cats, 81-66, Jan. 12 at Bramlage Coliseum.

Center Arthur Johnson led the way for Coach Quin Snyder's club, posting a career-high 23 points and 15 rebounds, while guards Kareem Rush and Clarence Gilbert scored 20 and 19, respectively.

K-State guard Gilson Delesus said Johnson's break-out performance seemed to take the Cats by surprise, considering Gilbert and Rush were known for putting the majority of the Tigers' points on the scoreboard.

"We knew Kareem Rush and Gilbert would shoot the ball all the time, so we expected that, but we didn't know their big man would have his best game of the year," DeJesus said.

The 6-foot-9, 270-pound Jourson has continued to play well too, averaging more than 13 points and eight rebounds in league games this season.

Both K-State and Missouri enter Saturday's matchup coming

The Tigers - fourth in the Big 12 standings - were defeated 84-71 Monday night at No. 6 Oklahoma, while the Cats were downed 85-71 at Colorado.

Siebrandt said defense, particularly rebounding, will be a focus for the purple this weekend, an area the team struggled in the earlier outing versus Mizzou.

In fact, defense will always give K-State its best chance at

"We're not going to beat anybody with our offense, running and gunning," Siebrandt said.

"We have to lock down on defense and that'll help us offensively. It's definitely our strong suit, and we've got to play off

Plus, K-State needs to put together a complete game on the road for the first time this season, Wooldridge said.

The Cats are 0-5 away from Bramlage Coliseum this year, and face a trio of Tigers on Saturday (Rush, Gilbert and Johnson) that combine to average 47.5 points per

"We're going to be on the road, so we've got to be a detailed team." Wooldridge said.

"We can't give easy baskets away. We can't do things offensively that lead to easy baskets on the other

"They're a team that shows you a pretty simple look, and you've got to match their look. There's not a lot of different actions to guard, necessarily, but their personnel make them a very difficult team to play."

Meeting on terror scheduled

Kanuas State Collegian

What could be the nation's first comprehensive conference on agroterrorism since Sept. 11 will be in Manhattan on March 25-26.

The Koch Crime Institute, Department of Agriculture and K-State announced Wednesday that the Midwest Conference on Agriculture Bioterrorism will be in Manhattan.

Ron Trewyn, vice provost for research, said the state economy's dependence on agriculture more than justifies having the conference.

"It is only natural that the conference be held," Trewyn said. "The recent events clearly deem some in the United States. The agriculture sector also is an area where people with goals against the U.S. could attack.

"We have to be prepared."

The conference's objective is to get practical information into the community that will be effective in times of crises, Jerry Jaax, associate vice provost for research, said.

"It will allow for heightened awareness to a particular issue that has a lot of importance in this part of the country," he said. "The information that is discussed would be available to them in a practical form in a timely manner as soon as it was needed."

One aspect of the conference would be educating producers to distinguish an intentional disease from an accidental exposure, an area K-State already has experts in, Trewyn said.

"We have authorities in these areas that deal with the issues on a day to day basis," he said. "This gives us an opportunity to highlight the expertise that is

Congress to decide on Enron ties

BY MARCY GORDON The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Vice President Dick Cheney on Sunday defended President Bush's right to refuse to identify the executives the White House met with in formulating the administration's energy policy.

Amid the Enron scandal. Congress' investigative arm will soon decide whether to sue to force the White House to turn over documents on the meetings last year with representatives of energy companies. They included the nowcollapsed Enron Corp., a Houston-based company with deep ties to Bush.

Cheney acknowledged that the dispute "probably will get resolved in court." Last week, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer had left open the possibility of a compromise.

"The ball is in the White House's court," Comptroller General David Walker, who heads the General Accounting Office, said in a telephone interview.

The White House said recently that representatives of Enron, an energy trader that was ranked as the seventhlargest U.S. corporation, met six times on energy issues last year with Cheney or his aides. Thousands of employees and big and small investors nationwide lost fortunes in Enron's plunging stock as the company spiraled into the biggest bankruptcy in U.S. history on Dec. 2.

The Justice Department is pursuing a criminal investigation of Enron and its longtime auditor, the accounting firm Arthur Andersen. The Securities and Exchange Commission has been investigating since Oct. 31. Eleven congressional committees also have opened

PAIN KILLERS

Acupuncture could be the answer to persistent pain

eeking back-pain treatment from a local chiropractor, a patient left the examination table with a prescription for an alternative treatment, acupuncture.

Shaun Conway, senior in architectural engineering, first went to the Chiropractic Family Health Center for trouble with his back. When Conway mentioned a nagging ankle pain to his doctor, he decided on a less-conventional treatment.

Conway's chiropractor, Mark Hatesohl, asked if acupuncture would be something he would try to relieve his ankle pain.

'It seems to kind of get rid of the pain," Conway said. "It doesn't really hurt. There is a little bit of a needle prick as it's going down."

Hatesohl said students who suffer from headaches for extended periods of time, or suffer from other health problems not responding to traditional treatments like Conway, often find their way to his office seeking an alternative to medical treatments that already have failed.

Hatesohl, a member in the International Academy of Clinical Acupuncture, learned acupuncture while attending the Cleveland Chiropractic College. He took the 100-hour elective class to help relieve his patients' pain while operating within the constraints of his chiropractic profession, he said.

"In Kansas, the chiropractic law is written such that we can do most anything except deliver babies, prescribe drugs and do surgeries, and so basically I was looking for something else to help people with pain management problems," he said.

Zong Zhu Lin, adviser of the Chinese Students and Scholars Association, said acupuncture is widely used in Chinese hospitals and in the United States for the nerve system as a painreliever stimulation. Lin said it is just like any other treatment; nothing in medicine is guaranteed 100 percent "It is one type of treatment, but it is not a religious belief,"

When he was living in China as a child, he said he went to an acupuncturist because of a lump on his leg.

"It went away," he said, "but I don't know if it was because of the acupuncture, or because it just went away."

Acupuncture originated in Asia. Its primary purpose is to relieve pain and strike harmony within the body's life force by inserting needles at certain points in the body, Hatesohl said.

These points, which are called meridians, are connected to parts of the body that might be causing pain. For instance, a pressure point on a person's hand can help control headaches.

"The theory is that the reason people get sick is because you have imbalances in your life force. So if you have too much energy going through your stomach pathway, you might get an nach or an ulcer, or if you have too little go through your lungs you get asthma," he said.

He said what they try to do with acupuncture is stimulate different acupuncture points that will have a healing effect.

We can medically prove that acupuncture increases blood flow into the area, which helps to get muscles to relax and produce endorphins, which are kind of a natural way to help with pain," he said.

There are three different techniques to acupuncture, he said. The most powerful way is to actually place needles into acupuncture points, but acupuncturists might also use a low electrical stimulation device and run a small electrical current on the skin.

Alligator clips also can be attached to needles inserted at acupuncture points to run a small electrical current across the points. Sometimes an acupuncturist, will use finger pressure on the acupuncture points, which is called acupressure.

Acupuncture needles come in varying lengths for different degrees of pain. For example, half-inch needles are used for serious sinus problems, whereas two-inch needles are used for lower back pain, he said.

"The needles are only .2 mm thick and made of stainless steel, so they don't break," Hatesohl said.

The needles are left in the body for 12 to 15 minutes. During that time the needles may be twisted as the muscles relax to push them deeper into the body.

wave of electricity to the affected area.

"Most people it takes somewhere between three to 12 hours to notice the full results of that acupuncture treatment that day," he said. "They usually have decreased pain and sleep more comfortably."

In some cases acupuncturists will suggest using a small, low electrical stimulation device for patients. Clips connected to the acupuncture needles and hooked to the box transmit a Hatesohl usually recommends that patients schedule five to six treatments initially. If in that time the patient notices definite improvements, treatments are scheduled accordingly.

Typically, he said, it is his chiropractic patients who request acupuncture.

"Most people are excited about trying it," he said. "It gives treatment a boost."

Election filing deadline for student government approaching

Kansas Szem Collegian

In just one short month, students will be bombarded with campaign fliers, banners and speeches.

The filing deadline for student body president and vice president, Student Senate, Fine Arts Council, Union Governing Board, Board of Student Publications and College Council candidates is Feb. 12.

Ted Conrad, elections committee chair, said he hopes students will consider running for office.

"It's a good way to get involved in the university," Conrad said, "Student government is an interesting organization. This is beyond academics. It exposes people to a different side of things."

Election packets and a list of regulations are available in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the Kansas State Student Union or online at The primary www.ksu.edu/elections. campaign is an addition to this spring's election. The primary campaign will take place a week before the general action if there are more than two president-vice president tickets.

"It mimics the real election," Conrad said. "The general election will be the deciding one. Everyone will find out at the same time. In past years, there was a runoff election conducted after the general election because the winning ticket must receive 50 percent of the votes, according to Student Governing Association regula-

The addition of the primary election also will give candidates more time to campaign. Everyone will be able to post information the week before the primary and then the week before the general election, Conrad said. In past years, they only had the week of the general election to display

Another change will be seen in the amount of money candidates are allowed to contribute.

Candidates are allowed to personally contribute $500 for the primary and general election combined, whereas before, the limit was $700 or $800,

"There were some senators who felt like too much money was being spent on presidential campaigns," he said.

Candidates also are limited to accepting no more than $15 from an individual

Conrad said presidential tickets usually spend up to $3000 on their campaigns.

Once again, students will have the opportunity to vote online, but this year with extended hours. The online polls will be available beginning on at 8 a.m. Tuesday and won't close until at 6 p.m. Wednesday for both the primary and general elections.

However, Conrad said voter turnout will not be based on convenience of the polls, but rather on the success of the candidates' campaigns.

The biggest thing that will increase voter turnout will be how the candidates run their campaigns and how interested they get students in their issues," he said. "They need to get students interested enough to get out there and vote for them."

Manhattan task force to discuss recycling options

If people want curbside recycling in Manhattan, they will have to speak up at the task force meeting at 7 tonight in the City Commission Room at City Hall, 1101 Poyntz Ave., Mayor Bruce Snead said.

The Mayor's Recycling Task Force was formed to explore, evaluate and propose options to the City Commission for citywide recycling. The task force will be discussing options at tonight's meeting.

"We want to hear from the public," Snead said. "We want them to tell us what they will pay for curbside recycling and how often they want it."

The task force will be discussing different financing and implementation options. Participation in the proposed recycling program would be voluntary, but payment for the service would be mandatory for all participating residential units.

Snead said the task force will bring a proposal before the City Commission soon. He said he hopes members of the community will attend tonight's public input session to voice their opinions about implementing the service.

Wichita mayor announces plans to run for governor

TOPEKA - Wichita Mayor Bob Knight said Saturday he'll run for governor, joining Attorney General Carla Stovall and State Treasurer Tim Shallenburger in seeking the GOP nomination.

"I have a lot of experience that can be beneficial for the state," said Knight, mayor of the state's largest city for more than 10 years.

Knight is a former investment banker who was elected to the Wichita city council in 1979. He served as commerce secretary for the late Gov. Joan Finney in 1993 and 1994.

The presumed Democratic nominee for governor is Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius.

Tax increases sought to save education spending

TOPEKA - Reluctance to cut education spending is pushing the Legislature toward raising taxes.

Two weeks ago, when the 2002 session convened, opposition to tax increases appeared all but insurmountable. When Gov. Bill Graves outlined his package of tax increases, his proposal for a 65-cent-a-pack rise in the cigarette tax elicited few audible gasps.

Republicans seemed ready to ram a budget plan through the Senate Ways and Means Committee drafted by Chairman Steve Morris and Senate President Dave Kerr. It avoids a tax increase by tapping into rainy day funds and cutting spending.

But Kerr, R-Hutchinson, and Morris. R-Hugoton, now support a bill for increasing tobacco and alcohol taxes to raise $87 million during the state's budget year that begins July 1. It's not the $228 million Graves wants, but it shows more willingness to consider a tax increase than was evident two weeks ago

And the Ways and Means Committee abandoned a key portion of the Kerr-Morris plan - an immediate cut in aid to public schools of $39 per student, to $3,831, to save the state $23.7 million.

Redevelopment division proposes extension of downtown

BY TARA PATTY

Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan's Redevelopment Division is proposing an extension of downtown Manhattan on both sides of north Fourth Street for the next phase of development in the city.

Downtown Tomorrow, the division's redevelopment plan, follows the attitude of the city to become a center of commerce for outlying areas and to keep residents and students from shopping other

Abigail Sharpe, junior in secondary education and biology, said that although she would like to see new stores, national chains are not what she would prefer for the development of downtown.

"That kind of gets annoying and we get a lot of that in the mall," Sharp said. "I'd like to see a lot of local stores, like clothes and knickknacks would be cool."

She said she would prefer Fourth Street and the rest of downtown to resemble Massachusetts Street in Lawrence.

She said she would like to see smaller businesses offering a unique variety of merchandise.

The Downtown Tomorrow plan sections off the Fourth Street corridor, which includes areas on Fourth Street between Bluemont Avenue and Fort Riley Boulevard and properties on north Third Street east of Fourth Street.

"It's timely for the City Commission and the planning board to decide where we are at with downtown and plan for the next phase," Ockert Fourie, senior city planner, said. "We are looking at the current situation and planning what needs to be done."

Fourie said the Steel and Pipe Supply warehouse, 206 Osage St., is within the corridor and looking to relocate to a more industrialized area. Any move Steel and Pipe Supply makes away from its current location will pave the way for development within the specified boundary.

Downtown Tomorrow planning meetings review Manhattan's and the corridor's redevelopment.

"I've been to some of their meetings and certainly appreciate what they're trying to do - keep businesses downtown instead of sprawl," David MacFarland, Manhattan resident, said.

MacFarland said he wants to take care of what Manhattan has despite developers. He supports Downtown Tomorrow's attempts to keep downtown viable and prevent developers from building on valuable Constructing any type of business in the area outlined by the proposal will require a change in zoning.

"Zoning will be done business by business to accommodate planned proposals case by case," Fourie said in "most cases, zoning will be Plan Unit Development because PUDs are more flexible and take into account the character of the site."

He said there are lots of specific recommendations in the plan, which include five priority actions ranging from market analysis of downtown and all of the main retail areas to creating an urban design plan for downtown, which includes guidelines for the downtown historic district.

"The plan has been adopted and all of these things are being pursued to some extent where opportunities

"An important component is to have people there 24 hours to encourage businesses," he said.

While students spent winter break lounging and making extra cash, professors were busy removing a campus legacy. A legacy that had been destroyed by K-State students.

The giant Foucault pendulum has graced the campus for 18 years. It was an unusual piece of art that also displayed the movement of the Earth.

But it had to go. The pendulum endured years of abuse from students until it was ruined.

Exactly what is so funny about vandalism? Is it destroying structures that were meant to bring other people joy? Or is it watching others work to clean up after the damage?

Vandalism doesn't just hurt the structure that is abused. It also wastes the time and money used to pay people who must remedy the situation.

Also, we cannot forget that vandalism hurts the people who do it. There can be serious legal and financial repercussions.

Vandalism is a ridiculous and childish waste of time.

If people feel that incredibly bored, they should try doing something that benefits the university. Join a club or volunteer some free time.

At a minimum, students should try using their destructive tendencies on their own property.

It would be great to see how they feel when they have to pick up the pieces of their own self-inflicted ruin. war or peace.

Students say MCC's housing solutions let tenants down

I am a student at Manhattan Christian College that has been booted from my apartment because of the electrical problems discussed in Friday's Collegian.

My roommates and I received word of our building being closed on Jan. 4. Our building was closed the same time the one that caught " on fire closed. The building MCC provided for us to move into will not be included in those being closed in July. However, because of our move we are now trying to come up with the finances to transfer our bills

I feel, along with a number of disgruntled students, that the leaders of this school did not take care of this problem as well as they appear. to have. When students began hearing word of the apartment buildings being condemned. many tried getting answers from MCC.

We were all told that closing the apartment buildings was just a rumor and there was no further discussion. My roommates and I were under the assumption that we would be moving back into our previous building after the electrical problem was to be fixed.

The other tenants in the housing that will be closed in July received notices in their mailboxes after they saw the paper.

Also, MCC is denying our security deposit refunds from our previous apartment because they want us to clean it before we move. Why? Since they are the ones that evicted us should we be forced to clean and check-out of our apartments before we get our security deposits back? They broke our contract.

They say that "no one expects these things to happen," but as all the tenants are well aware, these houses are old and always have problems. The reason we put up with the problems and with MCC is each person only pays around $100 a month for rent, but most tenants put money into fixing up their own place, as we did. Because MCC does not have enough housing for all of its students now, we will have to rent off-campus apartments, and most of us can't afford K-State housing.

I hope this letter informs people of what is really going on here and shows that MCC has let down their tenants and we are not happy.

love seeing Americans with those invisible subconscious patriotic blindfolds on, blocking out all signs of the truth. Quietly reassuring themselves that no resident, Republican or Democrat, could ever be guilty of wrongdoing.

The proof is abundant, yet Americans fail to pay any attention. A majority of Americans base their opinions on 25-second soundbytes or 2minute speeches more scripted than a Tarantino movie.

When you have the son of a former oil tycoon as your president, and the former chief executive officer of the largest oil services company in the world as your vice president, you have problems. war or peace. With the exception of some geologists, political scientists and historians, few Americans realize that Afghanistan sits in the way of the largest untapped oil reserves on the planet: an estimated $4 trillion in black gold was discovered only 20 years ago in and around the Caspian Sea basin.

There are several routes to retrieve this oil. It stretches through Iran, as well as former Soviet republics Azerbajian. Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, all of which were bought into by the oil industry years before and months after Sept. 11. Several U.S. companies including Halliburton, Exxon, Enron, and Unocal (76) have financial interests in this

It remains a mystery why most Americans are not yet familiar with Unocal (76), the Texas-based oil exploration and services corporation.

In 1997, it was Unocal who flew top Taliban diplomats to Texas to discuss the possibilities of building multiple sets of pipelines through the already war-torn Afghanistan. In 1998, John Maresca, a former Bush-appointed ambassador to Cyprus, testified before Congress on behalf of his new employer - Unocal.

He spoke of the possibilities the Caspian region held the capability of producing around 200 billion barrels of oil. But the construction of such a pipeline could not begin

Also formerly on Unocal's payroll is the newly-appointed prime minister of Afghanistan Hamed Karzai. He might be a very qualified and intelligent man, but reading his profile, one cannot help but notice his connections with big oil. and Karzai also was considered a valuable asset to the United States throughout the Soviet/Afghan war (1979-

Zalmay Khalilzad, who was a top senior Bush administration member, also was a former contracted employee of Unocal, and was said by the Washington Post to have played a role in the failed 1997 Taliban oil negotiations. Recently, Bush appointed him to act as the U.S. Special Envoy to Afghanistan, the medium between our two governments.

Look closer at our National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, who babysits Bush on most of his visits with world leaders. Rice was on the board of directors at Chevron from 1991 to 2001. You know, the company that just merged with Texaco?

Rice also has an extensive knowledge of U.S-Soviet relations, in particular the former Soviet republics that contain all that Texas Tea.

And then there's Vice President Dick Cheney. After Iraq destroyed Kuwait's infrastructure, it was Halliburton that was contracted to rebuild. When the U.S. military destroyed much of the former Yugoslavia with massive bombing campaigns, once again Halliburton inked a nine-figure contract to help reconstruct.

With a presence in 120 countries, Halliburton also has become one of the nation's largest defense contractors, contracted to set up roads and buses for U.S. military operations worldwide.

The former Nixon staffer, White House chief of staff for Ford and secretary of defense for Bush Sr. has made speeches in 1997 and 1998 about the Caspian region.

"I can't think of a better time when we've had a region emerge as suddenly to become as strategically significant as the Caspian. It's almost as if the possibilities arose overnight," remarked Cheney.

As of 2000, both Unocal and Halliburton had made multi-million dollar investments to build offshore oil facilities in Azerbajian, which borders the Caspian to the West.

Prior to the 2000 election, both Cheney and his wife Lynne were on the board of Texas-based defense contractor Lockheed Martin, which in recent months received the largest defense contract in American history.

'Friends' no competition for sitcom classics

ast Thursday night, I got caught up in the Must See TV craze. Yes, sadly, I sat down and watched "Friends."

It was bad luck, really. My girlfriend wanted me to watch the show

"Tell me what happens," she said. "I have to work.' I didn't have the heart to tell her 'no'.

Nick Bratkovic So, for a night, I was one of the Friends fans. You all know who you are. Those of you caught up in the "Friends" fever. You have to go and watch it with your- what elsefriends. The next day questions like 'will Joey and Rachel hook up? and 'What is the sex of Ross' baby?' are discussed ad naseum. I didn't like it. I just don't see the magic of it all.

How can any reasonable person consider this to be a great show?

"Friends" is style over substance. One canned formulaic joke after another. It's a 'Hey, how you doin, here, six cappuccinos and a loosely woven relationship' plot rolled into a 30-minute episode. From day one, it's been filled with gimmicks from Ross Geller's monkey to Rachel Green's hair.

I glimpse at each scene and think, "Boy, that has been done better on another sitcom.

Case in point. The show's trademark story: Ross and Rachel. They are having a baby together. They fight mercilessly and constantly are annoyed with one another. Now Joey, another one of the friends, wants to date Rachel.

It's been done before. Remember the early years of "Cheers?" That's what "Friends" has become. A relationship game of musical chairs.

I don't need to tune in and see six characters dating each other and swapping partners each season in the "Friends" relationship circus. I need that about as much as I need a Lifetime original movie.

Watching "Friends" to me is nothing more than six performers mailing it in like K-State playing in the Insight.com Bowl. Take Phoebe, played by Lisa Kudrow. Has a character ever had a worse role? She plays the ditz who says off-the-wall crap routinely. You would think that after all these years, she would get some quality material. A relationship or whatever. Maybe Kudrow just doesn't care. She makes a hefty check.

Perhaps I am alone in my distaste for "Friends." But I doubt it.

I guess I don't understand the phenom-

The feelings of enjoyment just aren't there for me, like when I used to watch shows like "Cheers", "Family Ties", "The Wonder Years", or today when watching "The Practice", "Simpsons" or the "West Wing.

Still, nothing compares to "Seinfeld." Reruns of "Seinfeld" make me long for new episodes.

Each week, you could tune in and expect quality. When they could not deliver anymore, they hung it up. It was like Michael Jordan's first retirement. The show left at the top of its game.

"Seinfeld" was a sitcom masterpiece. The show could take a guy who wants to conduct an orchestra, call him Maestro and make him funny. It could take the smallest things and make you laugh hysterically. Somehow, waiting for a table in a Chinese restaurant was funny

How many times have you had the conversation: "The best episode of "Seinfeld" was when...(fill in the blank)", and how many times have you had that conversation about Friends?

That's what I thought. Every episode is "Friends" is all that is left of Must See TV, the last trendy sitcom, in what has become a news magazine infested, realitycrazed, overpublicized television market. It is getting the fans and praise in a television market that has me longing for the

So, there you have it. I don't like "Friends." For those of you caught up in the phenomenon of it all, I have a proposition.

When the theme song plays this Thursday and the show starts, and Joey walks in and says, "Hey, how you doing?" or Ross gets neurotic about science, and Chandler cracks a wise remark to a routine question, ask yourself, 'do I really enjoy

Then continue watching as Rachel tosses her hair, and they make formulaic pregnancy jokes, and Monica gets stewed about kitchen stuff. Watch and ask yourself, 'do I really enjoy this?'

Then watch as Phoebe sings a lame song, and ask the question again. Answer 'No,' and keep watching.

You're already hooked, and "Seinfeld" reruns are not on until 10:30.

Damage causes pendulum removal

BY RYAN DONAHUE Kanson Stote Callegian

Proving the Earth rotates was at one time an important challenge for physicists. At K-State, the practical application of the rotation of the Earth used to be an everyday sight for most engineering students. During winter break, the College of Engineering decided to take down the Foucault pendulum clock in the Rathbone Hall atrium. Built as a physics demonstration for the rotation of the Earth, as well as a pendulum clock was an original modern art form for the atrium, the part of the Rathbone Hall opening. Richard Gallagher, associate dean of the College of Engineering. said the pendulum clock had lost its original beauty and no longer fits the modern look of the new Fiedler Hall addition.

"One factor was that it was in a state of needing repair. It would have taken an additional expense to bring it up to our expectations." Gallagher said.

The pendulum clock was designed and built at the request of the College of Engineering as a part of the Durland Hall expansion project. They had a contest for the best artistic design. Elliott Pujol. professor of art, won the contest and began work on the construction of the pendulum clock with former engineering professors E.E. Haft and Hugh Walker. The construction was finished prior to the opening of the Rathbone Hall addition in 1983.

Philip Kirmser, professor emeritus, was a friend and colleague of both Haft and Walker and witnessed the construction and deconstruction of the engineering

"It could run for weeks if no one messed with it. I would come in at 7:30 in the morning and start it, and sometimes I would have to start it three or four times a day," Kirmser

The clock had fallen into desperate need of repair and had been the victim of vandalism during the past few years. Kirmser said a lot of the vandalism resulted from a lack of awareness by students.

"If the students had understood what it was, and how it worked, they would have appreciated it more." Kirmser said.

Kirmser also said the ignorance toward the clock led to the lack of respect for the art work.

"There was one day where I heard a student explaining to another student that the pendulum worked off the pull of the moon," he

The clock does not run off the pull of the moon, Kirmser said. It demonstrates the rotation of the earth by swinging consistently in the same direction.

Kirmser said if people were to watch the pendulum swing for any given period of time, they would discover the pendulum appears to move in a counterclockwise direction. The pendulum itself does not actually move; the Earth moves around it.

The College of Engineering has no definite plans to replace the pendulum with another demonstration of working physics.

"We have nothing firm, but we are considering some form of artwork that coincides with our engineering theme," Gallagher said.

Kirmser said the deconstruction of the pendulum is a loss to the building and the College of Engineering.

The pendulum is being stored by the College of Engineering, and there are plans to dispose of the art

Spring career fair offers opportunities

BY AMBER KOEHN

Kansas State Collegia

Students have a new opportunity to network the job market at the first K-State Spring Career Fair Expo.

The event, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday in the Union Ballroom, will target students in engineering, technology, business and agriculture. It is sponsored by Career and Employment Services, K-State's Multicultural Engineering Program, the College of Engineering and the Management and Information Systems Student Organization.

"It's important for students to realize what opportunities are out there," said Wanda Arocho, graduate student in business administration. Arocho volunteers for CES and is coordinating the event's publicity.

................

The spring fair was created to give companies another chance to meet K-State students, Arocho said.

"Students should really take advantage of any chances they get, and get their names out there," she said. "Especially since most employers are in kind of a holding position and not hiring as much because of the economy."

On Tuesday, the Technology and Information Services Fair kicks off, with next-day interviews for potential candidates. And on Thursday, the Commerce and Agriculture Fair gets underway, also with next-day interviews available. Students should check which day better fits their career goals.

"The idea of being able to go to

Atmosphere changes with new success

Ah, another gameday in Manhattan. The students are lined up, and as far as the eye can see there is a steady stream of fans from Bramlage Coliseum to Wagner Field.

Wait a minute. It's the middle of January and football season is nearly seven months away. I'm talking about the sudden hype surrounding K-State's nationally ranked women's basketball team. Before students came back to town, 13,466 fans packed Bramlage to cheer the Cats on to an 85-71 win over conference rival Nebraska, setting a school record for attendance in both men's and women's boops

Josh Wells

As a journalist, I boast some of the best seats in the house. It doesn't get any better than courtside seats. Crammed next to a guy from The Hutchinson News on my left and a beat reporter for some mom and pop radio station on my right.

Of course the pregame duties are harsh—arriving an hour and a half before the game to get my spot. Then comes deadline with editors breathing down your neck and demanding that perfect story every time.

Really, I have the best seat in the house.

I am in alignment with the K-State bench, have a great views of the Classy Cats, and slightly beyond blowout range from the Cat Band. And then there are those nine-plus guys that are religiously at every game, seated right behind the official scorer wearing their zebra stripes.

OK, so I am guilty. I lied about my seats. They might be the worst. I can't cheer. I can't yell. I am jealous.

But success hasn't come without a price for the students. The students only are allowed 1,300 tickets for the old "show your ID rule" and then it will set you back $2 to see the game, but that really doesn't seem to bother most. After all, where else can you get an afternoon of entertainment for less than a value meal at McDonald's?

Enough on the aura of spending the afternoon with 13 sweaty women? How about their talent? Freshman guard Laurie Koehn is having a stellar season. Averaging 18.4 points per game, she leads the team in scoring while shooting an impressive 44 percent from beyond the three-point stripe.

Then there's fellow freshman Kendra Wecker. The Marysville product, as I see it, brings her entire hometown down to watch every game. Every day is Marysville Day in Bramlage, as Wecker hits 16.7 points per game and averages another 8.4 boards per game. Yet another star is freshman Megan Mahoney, who is averaging 10.4 points per game and leads the team in assists with 4.5 per game.

Sophomore forward Nicole Ohlde commands the paint when she is on the floor. Ohlde's mean look underneath has her averaging 17.3 points per game with nearly eight rebounds per game. Did I mention she likes to score double-doubles? Ohlde has posted eight of them on the year, third place in the Big 12.

And senior guard Kristin Rethman is the only upperclassmen starter for the Cats. She is shooting an impressive 46 percent from the field while averaging 7.2 points per game.

Heard enough? Try chatting with one of the ladies. The sudden thrust into national attention hasn't changed them a bit. They still smile and laugh and get that foolish grin every young lady gets when they are getting attention.

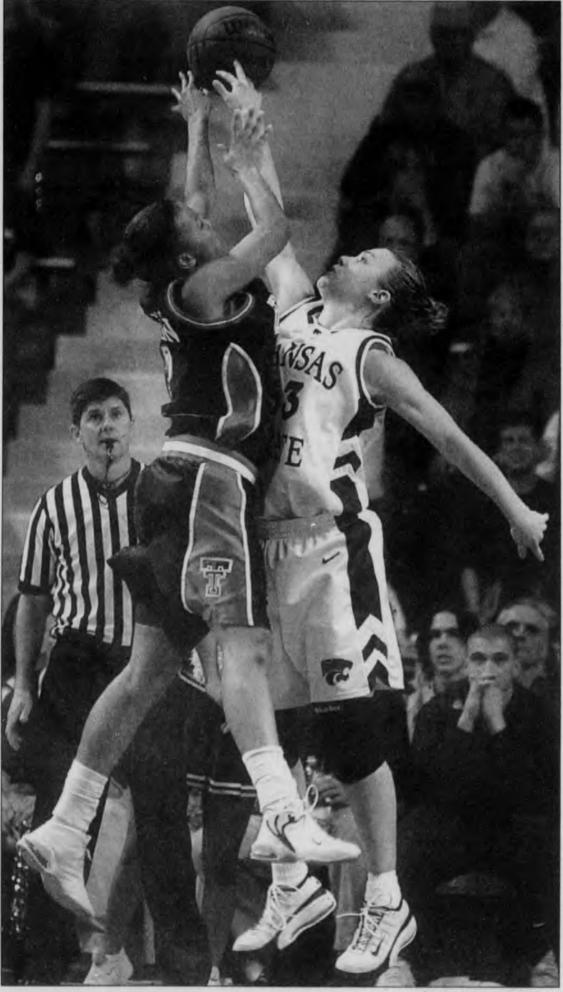

You wouldn't know any difference between them now and before the season started. K-State being ranked this season was far from the lips of any journalist.

But after an impressive start in the conference and upsetting Iowa State earlier in the season, it is all they can talk about.

Like it or not, the K-State Women's basketball team is for real. The Cats entered Sunday facing their toughest challenge as a ranked team. As I walked into Bramlage, I knew it was a great day to be a Wildcat.

Sitting all alone on the floor before the 13,340 fans would pack the house, I couldn't wait for the madness to start. The doors opened, and the fans came, bringing with them the best atmosphere in Women's College Basketball.

Win propels Cats to top of Big 12

BY DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegian

K-State Coach Deb Patterson knew coming in that Sunday's matchup with No. 12 Texas Tech would be a dogfight.

And after a 76-63 win over the Red Raiders (12-6, 4-4), she found out just how much bark her No. 11 Wildcats had in them.

"This was a tremendous game — everything you could on want out of a basketball game. I thought our team answered the call," she said.

K-State (19-2, 7-1) had four players score in double digits, and the Cats nearly doubled Texas Tech's post production (46-26) in front of 13,340 Bramlage Coliseum fans to move back into the Big 12 lead for the first time since losing to Oklahoma State on Jan. 19.

"We just came out and kept relying on the things we've practiced, and kept playing the same solid defense we've been playing," freshman guard Laurie Koehn said. "We did it for the whole game, and it eventually wore on them and ft worked for us."

The Wildcats' physical defensive play and attention to execution on offense worked like clockwork for much of the day, but in the first half it was anything but a cakewalk for either team.

 K-State had trouble containing Texas Tech standout guard Jia Perkins in the first 20 minutes, surrendering 18 points to the Red Raider sophomore, but the Wildcats found an answer off the bench in senior Kristin Rethman, whose 10 first-half points kept the score knotted at 33 heading into halftime.

That's when Patterson knew she had to find another threat on offense to balance out Tech's increasing pressure on the perimeter.

"We went in at halftime and we felt good about where we were, but we knew that a big priority coming into the second half had to be to establish our inside game," Patterson said.

That inside presence came from Nicole Ohlde.

The sophomore had passed up several shots in the first half and went to the locker room with seven points, but Ohlde would find the groove early in the second half,

K-State's win against Texas Tech was a 40-minute study of evolution.

In the first half, the Cats' weapon of choice was the forearm, as Tech tried to muscle up on K-State, but K-State finished the game using easy layups and jumpshots.

"They were real rough with us, and we knew coming in that they were going to pressure us," freshman guard Megan Mahoney said.

"They kind of talked about how they thought we were soft players and we wouldn't be able to handle the pressure, but we handled it, and in the second half, we turned things around and we executed our plays really good."

For example, in the first half, senior guard Kristin Rethman knocked a Tech player to the floor with a forearm to the chin to set up a three-point shot for freshman guard Laurie Koehn.

Minutes later, freshman forward Kendra Wecker avenged being knocked to the floor on offense by hustling back down on defense and shoving the offending Tech player.

The physical play climaxed two minutes before halftime when Mahoney smacked her head in the lane after driving and dishing to the wing. Fans screamed, Mahoney's lip bled and no foul was called.

When the half finally ended, K-State's 33 points were the result of more push and shove than beauty, as the Cats shot less than 50-percent from the field.

Then, in the second half, the Cats elevated their offensive execution to new heights. Patterson said heights, Patterson said.

"Our second half execution was on another level tonight. We improved over the course of the week and we maximized those 20 minutes," she said.

"I couldn't be more pleased with how all of our players stepped on the floor and did their jobs. They stuck to their individual responsibilities and played well as a unit."

The Cats scored 32 points in the lane in the second half alone. Sophomore forward Nicole Ohlde claimed the paint as her own, scoring 17 points to finish with 24 for the game.

Furthermore, when Ohlde wasn't scoring on spin moves in the lane, she was passing to a wide-open teammate for an uncontested layup.

"Ohlde's Just phenomenal. I was in awe," Mahoney said.

"She makes things so much easier for us, and she can make those moves inside, and then they have to start doubling and we get easy backdoor cuts."

As a result of Ohlde's play, the Cats earned not only a win, but also a bonafide big-game player.

"I've seen Nicole do some spectacular things, but I don't think she's ever had the opportunity to play at this level in a game with so much on the line," Patterson said. "That's what is particularly impressive about her performance tonight.

"It's not just individual skills that she demonstrated, but also the skill in a big, big game when you need her to step up and make those plays and make shots and she did."

Due partly to Ohlde's play, the Cats fixed an offense that had struggled at times during the last several games. In the Cats' loss at Oklahoma State a week ago, the team struggled to find any offensive rhythm at all.

"That was a point that was really hammered home this week in practice because our execution wasn't sharp," Rethman said.

"Everything really came together, and we relied on the system. We ran the shot clock way down a couple times, and we were still able to get some big baskets."

'Mothman' a good film despite liberties with facts

***

Giant supernatural mothmen sometimes warn us of cataclysmic events. It could happen.

At least that's the idea behind director Mark Pellington's new thriller, "The Mothman Prophecies," which supposedly is based in reality.

Think of the movie as a long episode of "The X-Files." Richard Gere is John Klein, a reporter for the Washington Post who suffers the loss of his wife. Two years later he mysteriously finds himself in a small West Virginian town where strange occurrences have the town frightened of a large dark man with wings and red eyes.

The series of sightings, stories and drawings in the town correspond to a vision Klein's wife had just before a traumatic car crash. So among the frightened residents of Pleasant Point. he sets out on a quest for the truth behind the seemingly insane stories.

From there things get creepier as more is revealed about the apparently ancient mothmen. The suspense is built steadily with visions and cryptic, inhuman voices.

It should also be said that from there, things get more fictionalized. About all that is really true is that people did see unexplainable prophetic visions that corresponded with the appearance of a moth-like man up to 1968, not asmodernized as the movie makes it seem, and then they change all kinds of other facts, like the death toll.

The movie still is fun to watch, but just don't fall into the trap of believing that it happened like Pellington portrays

Music, sound effects and cinematog-raphy all keep the movie spooky in a raise-the-hair-on-the-back-of-your-neck kind of way, which makes sense since this is basically a movie version of something from "Unsolved Mysteries."

Unfortunately, at times the cast and script play like a piece from the same show.

The melodramatic work of some of the supporting cast bog down the movie. As for the script, well at times it's like an overdone soap opera with the cheesy, spooky phone ringing all the time.

On the whole, though, the movie is just fun to watch and its loose base in reality ups the chill factor even if it is mostly fictionalized.

Sean Penn brings challenging character to life

"I AM SAM"

MOVIE REVIEW BY ADAM LEE

Mental retardation is a true test of one's acting ability.

The list of actors who have taken on the role of a mentally retarded character is long and impressive. John Malkovich, Dustin Hoffman, and Leonardo DiCaprio all have received praise for their interpretation of mental disabilities. In "I am Sam" Sean Penn becomes the latest actor to take on this challenge.

Penn plays Sam Dawson, an autistic Starbucks bus boy with the mental capacity of a 7-year-old. Despite his handicap, Sam has managed to successfully raise his daughter Lucy (Dakota Fanning) on his own.

Lucy is beginning to progress beyond her father in intelligence, and their relationship is being stressed. After Sam mistakenly is arrested for propositioning a hooker, social services are alerted to the situation and attempt to place Lucy in a foster home. In his fight to win his daughter back, Sam teams up with high powered attorney Rita Harrison, (Michelle Pfeiffer, "Batman Returns") who agrees to represent

Sam for free. Penn's performance is convincing and powerful. His hand movements, speech pattern, and facial expressions all enrich Sam's already well-written character. The presentation of Sam's disability is tastefully done without relying on sentimentalism.

In only her third film. Fanning is almost as impressive as veteran Penn. Her character's accelerated intelligence brilliantly accentuates the audiences

The Anniversary grows, creates progressive sound

"YOUR MAJESTY"

****

MUSIC REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN

Creating a buzz on the independent Vagrant record label, The Anniversary has released a truly majestic sophomore

Following up their January 2000 debut album, "Designing a Nervous Breakdown," the Lawrence-based band shows true growth and vision on "Your Majesty." The band mixes power-pop and glam in a progressive style that sets them apart from other Kansas rock peers.

Josh Berwanger, Justin Roelofs and company blend super-catchy power pop with the developed, intelligent sonics of their guitar-driven sound. This isn't just a Kansas act. The Anniversary is a nationallevel act that happens to be in Kansas.

But that's nothing you have to tell anyone who has been paying attention to this powerful fivesome, who have been working closely with Matt Pryor from label-mates The Get Up Kids, as well as Hot Rod Circuit and Superdrag, The Anniversary has earned a reputation for great shows and upbeat music. However, fans will notice that "Your Majesty" abandons much of the emo edge of some of their earlier work. Instead, The Anniversary defines their own style and sets their own boundaries with this album. The sound is bigger, more personal, and all their own.

This album is just plain different from "Nervous Breakdown," but it still carries the same personality and impact.

The Anniversary is taking cues from

A scene showing Sam in a Target particularly striking. The sequence not big, 70s- style rock. On "The Siren Sings," the band backs up sentimental, stripped-down rootsrock vocals in the verse with a lush Ziggyera Bowie style > that soars in the chorus and intro, underlining the peaks and make the band's sound so beautiful. No one else could make such sugar-coated guitar and synth hooks sound so smart.

The whole album is a roller-coaster of heartfelt emotions ranging from the funloving Pixies-esque "Crooked Crown" to the droning chorus vocals behind the cryptic lyrics of "Husam Husam." The result is rarely-matched achievement of artistic vision. If anything will compel people to start listening to indie music, this should be it. On "Never Die Young," the band reworks "To Never Die Young," which appeared on a split 7" vinyl single they released in 2000 with Hot Rod Circuit. The song now fits in more with their movement in style as the lyrics fall in the bridge, "Taking off in the dawn / I'll never die young / And I can live to regret this."

Those who really loved "Nervous Breakdown" might have a hard time with this album at first, but the talent put into the music should win them over. The Anniversary has just put out one of the best Kansas releases you can find.

already on campus."

-- Many of the threats to livestock and crops were developed during the Cold War as weapons of mass destruction, Trewyn said. In the hands of terrorists, the agents could cripple the state's ability to produce and export farm products.

The conference will give more exposure to K-State's expertise on this area, which is why Koch officials chose the university to cosponsor, Jaax said.

"It is a natural fit," he said. K-State has been proposing a $40-million food safety research facility to investigate the agents terrorists could potentially use against the nation's food supply. But Jaax said the conference is not an attempt to promote or generate money for the facility.

"However, it does play into the overall legitimate goal of the university - exposure to the possible threat of agroterrorism,"

That exposure, Jaax said, will be the key issue of the conference. "It is my opinion that the more people that are aware of the issues, the better prepared we are if a threat happens," he said. "The 'Gee, I hope this doesn't happen to me' attitude is the wrong approach to take."

energy plan was included specifically for Enron or at its urging, Cheney replied: "I can't say. I'm sure they supported many parts of it... I can't say a particular proposal came from them.'

Cheney also defended the conduct of Army Secretary Thomas White, a former vice chairman of Enron's energy services division, which reportedly was one of the units used to conceal the company's losses.

White has always conducted himself in an ethically fine manner,

"There's no evidence to indicate anybody did anything wrong in the administration," he said.

Cheney's statements on two Sunday talk shows raised accusations by some Democrats of White House stonewalling and the prospect of a battle over presidential privilege reminiscent of the Clinton administration's bitter Whitewater disputes with Republican lawmakers.

Two days before Bush's State of the Union address, Democratic Party leaders said the White House is making a serious mistake and predicted that Enron would be a looming issue in this year's election campaigns.

"The American people have a right to know what the facts are," Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said on CBS's "Face the Nation." "I think the administration needs to open up, to be willing to be forthcoming with all the information regarding these circumstances."

Cheney insisted that providing the list of industry executives would harm his ability to receive advice in the future.

"Now that would be unprecedented ... in the sense that it would make it virtually impossible for me to have confidential conversations with anybody," he told "Fox News Sunday."

"You just cannot accept that proposition without putting a chill over the ability of the president and vice president to receive unvarnished advice," Cheney said.

Missouri defeats Wildcats

BY SEAN PURCELL

Kansas State Collegian

COLUMBIA, Mo. - A streak K-State wished to snap this weekend was extended to 18.

The Cats 86-74 loss to No. 18 Missouri marked the 18th consecutive time K-State fell to the Tigers in Columbia. And like last year, it seemed the Wildcats were just inches from upsetting Missouri.

"I think at times we played extremely well. We had some opportunities in the second half to make it interesting, but we missed five straight free throws, so that really was the achilles heel during that stretch of the game - we could have really made up some more ground," Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

"That was a very good team - a ranked team - and you can't play in spurts; you have to play more consistently against that caliber of competition."

K-State's free throw woes came at the most inopportune of times. With 2:52 remaining, the Cats were back. The lead could have been less, but K-State made just three of its last 10 attempts from the charity stripe, an example of how the day went for the Cats.

For the game, K-State hit 12 of 23 from the free throw line, compared to Missouri's 23-of-32 performance.

But free throw shooting wasn't the only edge the Tigers had in the contest.

Playing in front of 13,168 fans at the Hearnes Center, senior Larry Reid said the home court advantage might have extended past the normal gametime atmosphere.

"It was a physical game, and I think the refs saw that, but I think they respected the home team a little more than us," Reid said.

Reid scored a team-high 19 points, 11 of those coming in the first half. Of K-State's 11 baskets in the first half, Reid had five.

"He carries our team at times. We get in these droughts, and we rely on him to get us out of it," Wooldridge said. "In the first half, got memories?

he responded very well to that, and I think he played very well."

However, K-State needed more production than just Reid.

Down 30-15 late in the first half, the Cats got it from Phineas Atchison. The senior scored all eight of his first-half points in the final 5:15 of the half, and finished the contest with 17.

"Once Atchison came in, I knew he had the capabilities to get some shots to fall, which he did," Reid said. "I didn't feel any pressure, I just knew I had to make some shots.

"When he came in, I knew I was going to get some help."

Despite the 12-point loss, Atchison said he saw glimpses of growth among his teammates.

"I think we played extremely well tonight," Atchison said.

"That is stuff that has been carrying over from the past few games, so we are gradually getting more competitive. Right now, we just have to stay together, and it will all come together in the next couple games we play."

scoring eight of K-State's first 12 points in the second frame.

"Nicole really owned the lane today," Patterson said. "She was big, she cut passing lanes on penetration. and she showed herself big."

Ohlde's presence didn't stop on offense. The 6-foot-4 center kept the Red Raiders from accomplishing much of anything in the post on defense, while solving Texas Tech's double-team approach on offense to lead the Cats with 24 points and 11 rebounds.

"They were just finding me really well, and I was able to get some good position a few times and with great passes I was able to get a few shots off and luckily they dropped for me,' Ohlde said.

Koehn, though, said Ohlde's night had very little to do with luck.

"She was awesome, just like always," she said. "Every time we got caught we just gave it to her because she was just tearing them up down there every time and they couldn't do anything to stop her."

Once Ohlde made her presence felt down low, K-State's offense opened up while Tech's disappeared. After chiseling the Cats' lead to six, the Raiders went on a three-minute scoring drought beginning at the 4:25 mark in the second-half, while the Cats pushed the lead to 15 to seal the

"It was really very special to see their competitive intensity and toughness and execution in the second half against a great program and a great basketball team," Patterson said.

Union to request funds for additional repairs

BY SARAH RICE

Kansas State Collegian

The K-State Student Union will be requesting more than $2 million funded by student privilege fees for repair and replacement reserve funds for the 2002-03 academic

The Union also will present two more proposals for its operations and program budgets to the privilege fee committee within the next five weeks.

Last academic year, the Union received $40 million for renovations, however, Union Executive Director Bernard Pitts said crucial problems still exist.

"Because we didn't take care of this building the way we should have over the course of years, we paid the price when it came to renovating," Pitts said. "We don't want to be in that position again."

Pitts highlighted areas in the Union for privilege fee committee members Monday evening with a tour of damaged and outdated facilities.

Several of the bowling lanes existed when they originally were placed in Union Station in Terri Eddy, recreation director, said that each time the lanes are resurfaced to meet certification standards, the nail punctures, caused by old age, have to be repaired costing. even more money.

What we want to do, is place a laminate on the lanes that requires almost zero maintenance except daily oiling, Connaughton said. The laminate will eliminate resurfacing each

Eddy said this new laminating technology will cost $4,000 per lane.

The Union Recreation Center also is requesting $12,000 to replace masking units, boards above the bowling pins which conceal the pin setters, that have become torn and "It is just looks," Eddy said. "But the looks are what is most important. That is what you sell yourself on."

Underneath the Union Food Court lies even more problems, Eric Braun, director of food services, said. The freight elevator, used to transport food between floors, has snipped off fingers and spilled plates of food.

"It never lands where it is supposed to land," Braun said. "There is no automatic setting so it lands where it is even."

The elevator, because of its age, can hold no more than 2,000 pounds.

"Food warmers are quite heavy, so we do have an inability to carry as much as we would like," Braun said.

Not only does the transporting of food create daily challenges, he said, but baking the goods causes difficulties, too.

The dough press, used to make most bread products, was made in 1952.

"It would be $4,000 to replace it," Braun said. "It still works, but the unique thing about this dough press is, if any of these parts broke, there are no parts to replace it."

Counterfeit bill found; originated from KSU

BY LINDSAY FETTERMAN

A counterfeit $20 bill that originated on campus was found at the InTrust bank in downtown Manhattan Friday afternoon.

The counterfeit money, which came from the Veterinary Medicine Complex, was transferred to the controller's office and then to InTrust bank, where it was found to be counterfeit, said Troy Lane, K-State Police investigator.

The bill's serial number, BG14336691G. was the same as the three counterfeit bills found in Manhattan last week

Lane said the media has informed the public about what is going on, and the financial institutions throughout town have been notified that they should be aware of counterfeit money, Lane said.

All campus business offices were notified of the counterfeit money, said Doug Ackley, assistant controller for cashiering and student loans.

They have been advised to look for certain characteristics and at the serial numbers, Ackley said.

Recent K-State alumni report success in job market; offer advice to students

BY AMBER KOEHN

Success in the job market has dropped in the past months due to economic hardships, but not for recent K-State graduates.

A survey conducted by Career and Employment Services focusing on K-State students who earned bachelor's degrees between August 2000 and May 2001 showed the graduates are doing well economically.

Between August 2000 and May 2001, K-State had 3,090 students graduate with bachelor's degrees. Of those, 2,755 responded to the survey, said Marcia Schuley, associate director of CES.

"Eighty-nine percent of graduates responded to our survey, which is the highest participation rate out of the Kansas Board of Regents schools in our area," she said.

By six months after graduation, 68 percent of respondents reported they were employed. Nineteen percent, or 435 students, chose to enroll in graduate school, and 10 percent, or 277 students, still were seeking employment.

"We contacted every single graduate," Schuley said, "and it was back-breaking work."

Schuley said the goal of CES was to see how many students were gainfully occupied, not necessarily employed.

"That's the bottom line," she said. The College of Architecture, Planning and Design reported an employment rate of 95

"Getting a 'real' job and making money is very tempting, but if your longterm goals require a higher degree, get it right away. Otherwise, you may never get back to school."

percent - the highest of all the colleges, Schuley said.

"None of the architecture, planning and design students went on to graduate school,"

Dustin Petrik, May 2001 graduate in microbiology, said he wanted to go to graduate school.

"Graduate school focuses on research techniques, critical thinking and problemsolving," he said. "Therefore, I spend more time doing what I enjoy."

Petrik's advice for undergraduates thinking about graduate school is to look at several options before making a decision.

Think about the future," he said. "Getting a 'real' job and making money is very tempting, but if your long-term goals require a higher degree, get it right away."

Jake Worcester, May 2001 graduate in agricultural economics, entered the work force instead of continuing his education.

"I gave a lot of thought to what I wanted to do," he said. "Grad school was considered pretty heavily, but I needed something different than the school scene."

Worcester said he wasn't sure what he wanted to do, but it didn't seem smart to spend three to four years in graduate school if it wasn't what he really wanted.

"I was fortunate to get a job, but there are advantages and disadvantages," he said. "I think for students considering grad school. the important thing is to decide what it is they really want to get out of the experience."

Worcester said many students choose graduate school because they don't know what they want to do with their lives.

"In my opinion, it works better the other way around. If you're not sure, why go spend more time and money? Try the work force, and see where it takes you."

Worcester also said taking on leadership roles will help students in their jobs.

"The leadership role I experienced as student body president has helped me with my job," he said.

Schuley said students should keep their resumés updated and consider attending the fall and spring all-university career fairs.

"I also encourage students who have already graduated to report what they're doing," she said.

Manhattan sets construction record for total value in 2001

Building permits issued in 2001 increased by 49 percent to set construction record.

BY WENDY SCHANTZ Kansur State Collegian

A combination of big projects helped contribute to a record-breaking year for the total value of construction in Manhattan, City Manager Ron Fehr said.

In 2001, there was $46.7 million worth of building permits issued, an increase of 49 percent over 2000's figure of $31.2 million, city records

The previous high was in 1999, with $45.3 million.

The record not only was created by new buildings, but also by an expansion of existing structures, Fehr said. The largest project of all was the first two phases of Mercy Health Center's $56-million expansion.

"Our thoughts haven't been on the economy," said April Hamilton, community relations and planning coordinator for Mercy.

"They've been on providing the best-quality health care to our citizens.

Materials Inc. building also added to the total, Brad Claussen, city building official, said.

"It's nice to see there's a lot of building going on," Claussen said.

"It's good for the local economy." Fehr said that while some communities in the nation are dependent on private-sector jobs, Manhattan made a push with the four-year, half-cent sales tax for economic development to find an equilibrium between private and public jobs.

He said the tax was to recruit private businesses to Manhattan, but public-sector jobs help when the economy is down. "In the current economy, the public jobs have helped stabilize Manhattan,"

"K-State remains strong, and Fort Riley is very strong." Although it is too soon to tell, Manhattan's economy looks to remain strong in 2002, Fehr said.

Senate tax committee hears criticism of tax proposals

TOPEKA - Some Republicans consider it the plan most likely to pass the Senate - if any tax increase will.

But the Assessment and Taxation Committee heard criticism Monday about raising tobacco and alcohol taxes from lobbyists.

The proposal would raise $87 million during the state's 2003 fiscal year, which begins July 1. Its supporters hope the extra money would prevent a cut in aid to public schools.

But opponents said the tax increases would hurt sales in grocery and convenience stores and even cost Kansas jobs in a slumping economy.

The Distilled Spirits Council of the United States estimated that the state would lose $60 million in sales and 1,000 jobs because of the higher alcohol taxes.

achel Gordinier, K-State graduate in family life and community service, said she became a mother overnight after accepting her job as a full-time nanny. Gordinier takes care of three Wichita children, ages 9, 5 and 2.

"Life after college is definitely different," she said.

"I have a lot more responsibilities."

Monday through Friday, Gordinier wakes up at 6 a.m., then drives a 20 to 25 miles to the family's home, where she works.

Gordinier's daily tasks include getting the children ready for school, dropping them off and picking them up, running errands, playing with the kids, making lunch and dinner, light cleaning and getting the kids to their after-school activities on time.

"I feel like an old maid," Gordinier said.

She said her job was hard the first few months.

She had to get used to the kids, but more importantly, the kids had to get used to her.

"I had most problems with the oldest," Gordinier said. "She was already set in her ways."

But now she is adjusted and so are the kids.

"Not only am I getting used to them, they are getting used to me," Gordinier said.

"We have a really good relationship now."

Gordinier said her job was a huge transition from college life.

"I loved K-State, but I was ready for a change," Gordinier said. "I reached a point in my life where it was time to move on.'

Perhaps that is too harsh. Actually, I hate her

Every time I turn on the radio, my ears retreat into my head as the pseudo-sultry performer strains to hit the perfect note in her almighty quest to dumb down

As painful as it is to listen to her bubble-gum yapping, I am consoled by the knowledge that I can always switch over to another radio station and hear a more refined sound.

I want Pink Floyd, The Doors, Led Zeppelin.

You know, real music.

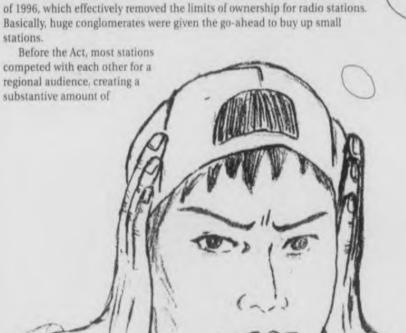

Turning the station, however, I don't hear "Riders On The Storm." Instead, I am introduced to Spears' bold statement of "Oops, I Did It Again." There is no "Dyer Maker," only "How You Remind Me."

Engrossed in a mad search for quality music, I quickly bounce from station to station: Nickelback, Britney Spears, Nickelback, Lifehouse, Nickelback, The Calling, Nickelback...Argh!

Let the insanity stop.

Okay, maybe that is a bit too dramatic. But it illustrates a very new and very disturbing trend: a majority of radio stations recently have adopted the same format, inbreeding the airwaves with a lack of diversity and regional identity.

The root of this trend can be traced backed to the Telecommunications Act Basically, huge conglomerates were given the go-ahead to buy up small diversity on the airwaves. Experiments with local music, varying play lists and promotional gimmicks were employed to gain a competitive edge.

With the implementation of the Telecommunications Act, these practices were scaled back as huge companies sought the rights for local stations.

Douglas Gomery, professor of media economics and history at the University of Maryland, said three main radio moguls appeared: Clear Channel, CBS and ABC. As these giants scrambled to build radio empires, diversity and originality fell by the wayside.

Fewer program directors have bred fewer ideas for running a radio station. As the corporations took control, they implemented the same operating procedures for each of their stations. Predominant in large markets like as Kansas City, Mo., these formerly creative stations began to gel into the "Total Request Live" muck that we wade through today on the radio.

History has proved that wide-spread competition is best for a capitalist system, producing the best product at the best price.

Presently, radio is not providing us its best product and I say it's time for a

There is so much talent in the music world that goes unnoticed. The singer/songwriter isn't dead, she's just lost in the wake of a new music bureaucracy. To bring new, inspirational talent to light we need to create better outlets for music

We are very lucky at K-State to have an independent radio station that can choose its own format and experiment with new bands and fresh talent, as well as mix in the popular tunes of today.

But not every market is so fortunate, leading to a very shallow output in once vibrant musical communities.

Let's start requesting different songs and artists. We've got to let these stations, and corporations, know that we are tired of the same daily drudge.

Believe it or not, I once enjoyed listening to Nickelback's "How You Remind Me." That was eight months ago, however, and it is still played every other minute on radio

It is my hope that the powers that be will begin to give control back to their local subsidiaries. Until then, I'll continue to click the radio off and hum a few bars of "The Great Gig In The Sky."

Bingrong He/Collegian

While the economy of the 20th century relied on raw goods such as steel, oil and chemicals, the economy of the 21st century will depend on the knowledge of college graduates. Without educated leaders to revolutionize sectors like microelectronics, biotechnology and telecommunications, we cannot only expect a low first quarter of 2002, but also a slow first quarter of the 21st century.

Innovation has always been the catalyst for economic growth, and to ensure innovation continues, we must see to it that every qualified student gets a degree.

Moreover, students are not a drain on the state's economy but rather an investment (a beer fund, if you will). To pull from investment in education is the same as pulling from one's retirement account - the immediate problem is fixed, but in the long run the dilemma escalates.

Increasing tuition only will prevent more working-class college-aged adults from obtaining a bachelor's degree. In turn, the result will be a less innovative, less competitive nation.

The majority of Americans believe that college is an absolute necessity to succeed, but at the same time, even more worry about the cost of tuition, according to the Washington Post. Does it bother anyone else that something deemed a necessity is costing lower-income families in excess of $10,000 per year?

The purpose of government is to provide necessities that individuals could not otherwise provide for themselves, such as fire protection, water treatment and road infrastructure, and provide them for a nominal fee. For some reason, even though we have established the communal benefits of education, individuals have to pay astronomical costs for education. This must change. Otherwise, we further the gap between social classes by providing a quality education only to those who have $45,000 sitting around.

Higher education should be the one great equalizer in America.

That, and professional wrestling. Any young adult possessing the intellect and dedication to better themselves through further education should be given the chance; finances do not indicate personal

If we allow only upper middle-class families to send their children to school, then these children will be the only ones obtaining college-level salaries.

We create a vicious cycle by banishing lower middle-class families from educational attainment, and holding them permanently in their socioeconomic rut. Such a premise is not only unjust, but against American ideals of democracy.

Wildcat center makes significant contributions in 1st year

BY SEAN PURCELL

Kansas State Collagian

ife, for most teenagers, includes growth spurts. But imagine growing four inches in just one summer. Suddenly, the ordinary kid no longer is ordinary and people begin to notice you a little more.

Life for Pervis Pasco has been anything but ordinary.

Pasco's growth spurt during the summer between his seventh and eighth grade year is just the beginning of where the story begins.

Pasco had not even begun to seriously consider basketball at that time.

Pleas from middle school coaches trying to coax Pasco into playing basketball were useless, and his introduction to the sport wouldn't come until a couple of Pasco's friends finally lured him to the game.

"When I moved to Tampa, I met a couple guys who were really into playing basketball," Pasco said. "Playing with the guys I was playing with, and seeing how good they were, helped me become a good player myself.

"Being around them and playing against the competition I was playing against, I had to be Pasco is averaging 11.6 points and 8.9 rebounds per contest for the Cats this season, and the junior is starting to earn a reputation for his intense on-court energy, a product of his work ethic in practice.

"He's trying to build a reputation in his first year in the Big 12," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "He takes a lot of pride in his effort on and off the court."

Pasco's hard work has translated into personal success, junior Matt Siebrandt said, and it's his intense determination to play hard that has given Pasco an advantage over his competitors.

"Pervis is so athletic - I don't think there are many big men in the conference, with the exception of Drew Gooden, that can match his athleticism." Siebrandt said.

"He is tough to guard, and he's a great defensive player for us

"The sky is the limit for Perv he knows it, too" Siebrandt said. "He works hard every day. He knows he's young in the game, and the harder he works the better he will get - for a guy like that, you're going to get better and quicker everyday, and we see that.'

Of K-State's seven newcomers, Pasco's athleticism is a big reason why he is considered as the go-to guy on offense for the Cats.

And with Pasco's continued improvements. Wooldridge couldn't be more excited with what the future holds for the Wildcat

Spring intramural season kicks off; students prepare for competitive play

Kansas State Collegian

Finding a parking spot at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex tonight is not going to be easy. Along with the usual early-evening rush to work out, students are heading to the Rec Complex for the start of the intramural basketball season.

John Wondra, assistant intramural director at the Rec Complex, said teams have been reserving courts for practice and scrimmages. Today is the official start of the Wondra said that in past years an average of 325 teams sign up for the six basketball leagues, and this year is no different.

"Everyone grew up with basketball and so many played back home and with the availability of the courts, everyone wants to play," Wondra said.

The men's teams are divided into fraternity, residential, independent and the six feet and under leagues. There is one combined women's league and a co-rec league.

Despite the different divisions, students said competitiveness is the one constant throughout play.

"It is so competitive here, and that makes it fun," Jay Herbers, junior in marketing, said. "Guys on my team take things seriously, but we have fun. It's definitely exciting.

"A lot of us are transfers from junior colleges, and we meet up here and decided to put a team together."

For some teams, spectators make the season even more special.

"Basketball season is awesome because

John Wondra, assistant intramural director for the Rec Complex

so many people come to watch and cheer their teams on," Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority member Molly McLenon said. "It is such a fast game, and it just gets you pumped."

Although Beta Theta Pi fraternity fell short in the All-University Championship to the Naked Bootleggers, the team took home the fraternity title last year.

"It gives us some bragging rights and gives the fraternity big points in the overall intramural point total," said Beta Theta Pi member Bjorn Melander. "But it is going to be a challenge to defend the fraternity title."

In addition to basketball games, individual intramurals start Wednesday. Recreational Services is offering 4-wall handball doubles, 4-wall racquetball doubles, table tennis doubles and walleyball doubles to students.

"We have good numbers for the individual sports," Wondra said. "A lot of fraternity members sign up to get points for their house, and we get a lot of good independents in the mix, too." The Rec Complex also is having a free-throw contest Feb. 8-9.

"The Rec is always packed this time of the year," McLenon said. "It is just a great atmosphere and something people look forward to."

Surprising outcomes in sports another reason to keep watching

view

Another professional season is coming to a close, and once again a team no one thought would make it to the Super Bowl is packing their bags for the Big Easy.

Seriously, if you would have told me the New England Patriots were going to be in this year's title game, I would have kicked you in the head and then told you to get your brain examined. Not even when the Patriots made the playoffs did I sincerely entertain the idea they would be the AFC's representative. But like my grandpa always told me. 'That is why you play those games, because you never know what's going to happen."

I guess the Pittsburgh Steelers should have taken a lesson from good ol' grandpa Henderson. Talk about overlooking an opponent. It was rumored that Bill Cower's club was making Super Bowl preparations even before playing Sunday's game with New England. I guess this one came back to bite them in the butt.

Nevertheless, the unpredictability of sports is what makes the sport the most enjoyable to watch. You never know how things are going to come out. True, it is easy to predict what is most likely to happen, but until all four quarters are up, nothing is a sure thing.

Professional sports are a little more different than college, however.

It's always a safe bet that the New York Yankees are going to win a lot of games, just like you can figure on the St. Louis Rams beating up on the Carolina Panthers. When something is a profession, money trumps everything else. But in college, things are a little different.

Take the Big 12 for example. We literally beat the crap out of each other. Football is the biggest indicator of that > Nebraska beats K-State. Oklahoma beats Nebraska, Texas A&M beats Oklahoma and we beat Texas A&M. Of course such was not the case this year.

Sean Purcell but you get where I am going . with this. College sports truly allow fans, especially neutral ones, to watch a game and bet on the fact that something unpredictable will happen.

Even the great basketball schools like Duke and North Carolina show their unpredictable sides. Duke beats the living tar out of No. 3 Maryland, but loses to Florida State. Then, the Tar Heels get it handed to them by everyone. I don't care what anyone says about the K-State men's basketball team this year, I would not want to be a Tar Heel fan in 2002. So, I think I just might watch the Super Bowl this year.

What are New England's chances against Kurt Warner and the Rams? I would say pretty good. I mean, stranger things have happened this year. Michael Jordan came back, Mark McGwire retired and BYU went Oh wait - that one didn't happen. They, too, counted their chickens before they were hatched.

2001: a music odyssey

Readers, reviewers share year's favorites

BY JJ DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

Year 2001 was a dynamic year for music, signaling several changing trends in the business.

Boy bands are on a decline, hip-hop is changing its face, more people are paying attention to electronica, and rock music is alive and healthy. The Collegian asked its readers, as well as several insiders, what they thought of music in 2001, and this was their message.

The reader's choice 2001 Collegian Music Awards survey ran Nov. 27 and Jan. 18, and the results have been compiled. Here they are.

Best hip-hop album - Snoop Dogg "The Doggfather"

Snoop Dogg proved his longevity in 2001 with public acceptance of "The Doggfather."

Snoop toned down his image on the new album. C.J. Wadsworth, known as Big Daddy Bo Cephus on the KSDB-FM 91.9, said hip-hop changed in 2001 because the music has become less edgy. Instead of violent gangsta rap, hip-hop is leaning more toward positive party music, and Snoop succeeded in following suit.

Wadsworth, senior in sociology, said it was a good year for hip-hop because it was proved that the genre could battle for listeners on pop-dominated radio stations. Besides hip-hop becoming less violent, there's also a trend in political messages within hip-hop, and a growing affinity for soul singers.

Wadsworth's choice for best hip-hop album of 2001 - Jay-Z: "The Blueprint"

Collegian Critic's choice for best hip-hop album of 2001 - The Coup: "Party Music"

Notable others - Missy Elliott: "Miss E... So Addictive" and Outkast: "Stankonia"

Best pop album - Alicia Keyes: "Songs in a Minor Key"

Alicia Keyes pulled way ahead of boy bands, Britney and Destiny's Child in the readers' opinions.

Keyes brings to pop radio what many pop acts lack — mass quantities of talent. Not only can she sing the competition into the ground, she also writes all of her lyrics and composes all of her music.

She has been acclaimed for her low-key live performances where she spends most of her time at the piano instead of doing synchronized dances. The artist blew many away, Wadsworth said.

"Alicia Keyes came out of nowhere and shocked everyone with the talent of her voice and her writing," he said. "At first I didn't know who she was when we started getting requests for her at the station, but then I listened and was blown away."

Courtney Worthington, Hastings employee for four years, also commended Keyes for her musicianship. Worthington, senior in social sciences, said soul and hip-hop fans have also been buying her album.

Wadsorth, Worthington and Collegian Critic's choice -Alicia Keyes: "Songs in a Minor Key" Notable Others - 'N Sync: "Celebrity"

Best rock album - Stone Temple Pilots: "Shangri-La Dee Da"

Stone Temple Pilots pulled a slim victory over Bush's "The Golden State" with their 2001 release.

The race was close with Creed and the Dave Matthews Band not far behind. Stone Temple Pilots have become a staple in modern rock for their progressive version of the Seattle grunge sound.

Worthington said she would choose Creed's "Weathered" because of the band's message.

"Creed is absolutely amazing because of the messages within their music," she said. "Instead of singing about going out and getting drunk and hooking up with someone, they say to find who you are and be yourself."

Worthington's choice - Creed "Weathered" Notable others - Tenacious D: "Tenacious D"

Best hard rock album - Staind: "Break the Cycle"

Not only did Staind gain acceptance among hard rock fans, but "Break the Cycle" ended seventh in the 2001 Billboard charts, beating out boy band 'N Sync on the charts.

Singer Aaron Lewis became the new spokesman for teen angst as he sang lyrics like "I just needed someone to talk to / You were just too busy with yourself." The result was high sales and critical acclaim for the powerful band.

Worthington said the album carried a message

Worthington said the album carried a messag listeners could relate to, and so they were wellreceived.

"People really identified with what he was saying in 'It's Been Awhile,'" she said. "It's not like those '80s power ballads that lt's llads that were so silly. He was talking about his experiences, and people identified with it. I did."

Worthington's choice - Nickelback: "Silver Side Up" Wadsworth's choice - System of a Down: "Toxicity" Collegian Critic's Choice - Tool: "Lateralus" Notable others - Fuel: "Something Like Human"

Best alternative rock album - Incubus: "Morning View"

In the span of one year, Incubus went from well-respected and critically acclaimed lesser-known band to full blown rock stardom.

"Morning View" followed up their successful 1999 release, "Make Yourself." The album was immediately praised as one of the most intelligent and diverse albums of the year. Singer Brandon Boyd's red-tattooed forearm became a familiar sight as he grabbed the mic on multiple TV appearances throughout the year.

Following close behind were Weezer with "The Green Album" and Gorillaz with their self-titled debut.

Worthington's Choice - Gorillaz: "Gorillaz" Collegian Critic's Choice - The Strokes: "Is This It" Notable Others - Sum 41: "All Killer, No Filler"

MUST STAY IN

Best country album - Tim McGraw: "Set This Circus Down"

Tim McGraw beat out country giant Garth Brooks for the best country album in 2001.

McGraw has become revered for his ability to straddle the line between traditional and newer, more pop-oriented country music. Scott Walker, music director for country station KYEZ-FM 94, said McGraw's album proved himas a leader in the new country music.

"He's gotten to the point that he could do children's tunes and the album would go top five," Walker said.

I'M SO HAPPY

I WON, BUT I

CAN NOT SMILE...

As a whole, 2001 was a good year for country music, and Walker said country music sold better than in 2000 without any big name crossover artists like the Dixie Chicks releasing an album.

Walker's choice - Toby Keith: "Pull My Chain" Collegian Critic's choice -Soundtrack: "O Brother Where Art

Best Electronica Album - Crystal Method: "Tweekend"

Crystal Method was a narrow first choice over Daft Punk's

The act has become a popular live show as well as gaining renoun for their mainstream version of techno. Daft Punk gained considerable popularity for their single "One More Time," which marked a rare occasion of electronica making it to mainstream radio.

Techno DJ Andrew Boie said his choice for the year was Aphex Twiri's "Drukqs" for their different and dissonant work. As far as Daft Punk, Boie, junior in computer sciences, said the album is too cheesy for his tastes.

Electronica has become a more popular genre, and Boie said it's easily noticeable.

"Manhattan has a new trend of electronica being more accepted." he said. "When I first moved up here, I wouldn't have ever thought people would be bumping trance in Aggieville, but now it's pretty common."

Boie's choice - Aphex Twin: "Drukqs" Collegian Critic's choice - Aphex Twin: "Drukqs"

Song most overplayed in 2001 - Staind: "It's Been Awhile"

No one could get away from Aaron Lewis' mopey voice this summer as "It's Been Awhile" droned over every modern rock station in the galaxy.

Unfortunately, the downside with popularity is that everyone gets tired of your hit single after about a month in heavy rotation.

Musicians most likely to be working in fast food in a year - Crazy Town Crazy Town headed out the revolving door of music after a flash in the pan in 2001.

Worthington said people were unhappy with the album on the whole, and discount shipments of the band's album "The Gift of Game" are being distributed to record stores.

Artist of the Year - Incubus

Incubus was chosen as the band of the year, becoming extremely popular in 2001.

Alicia Keyes came in a close second, but this year it seems that people prefer rock to pop.

So now it's time to watch for everything 2002 has to offer. Let's hope it's even better than 2001.

Aaron Lewis of Staind

Nonviolence campaign begins Wednesday

BY LINDSAY FETTERMAN Kansas State Collegian

The K-State Campaign for Nonviolence begins Wednesday and runs through April 4.

"We want to increase awareness for handling conflict, assist in decreasing the number of sexual assaults, conflicts on campus and overall to improve life interactions," said Dorinda Lambert, campaign chair and assistant director of University Counseling Services.

The campaign begins at 11:30 a.m. Wednesday in the K-State Student Union's Little Theatre with a film about civil rights. Following the film, James Butler, the local head of the NAACP, will conduct a discussion about the film and other issues viewers would like to discuss. The film will be shown again in the evening at the Manhattan Public Library.

On Feb. 4, Eisha Mason, executive director of the Season of Nonviolence in Los Angeles, Calif., will give a free presentation on nonviolence in the community at 7 p.m. in the Union's Forum Hall.

A free workshop, "Creating a Nonviolent Community," will be from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Feb. 5.

There will be limited space for this workshop, so those interested should register on the Internet as soon as possible, Lambert said.

There also will be a film series focusing on leaders of nonviolent movements followed by discussions. The discussions will be lead by local individuals who are familiar with the topics of the films.

Students also can attend "Extremities," a play performed by the K-State theater department that deals with sexual violence. The play begins

The goals of the campaign are to create positive, nonviolent, respectful behavior and to inform students

Projects the committee members are working on include an annual fall rally, which started in August 2001. The fall rally emphasizes non-violent behavior amongst students, as well as educating students.

The spring nonviolence campaign would continue these ideas and possibly develop a non-violence program for use in classrooms.

K-State's campaign is part of a nationwide Season of Nonviolence that lasts for 64 days and honors Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Mahatma Gandhi and their commitment toward

Student dies Sunday in hometown

BY SARAH BAHARI Konsas State Collegian

A K-State student died Sunday in his hometown of Wilson, Kan. David Miller, senior in elementary education, was found dead from a self-inflicted gunshot wound.

Miller, 22, was a member of Theta Xi fraternity at. He was involved in intramurals and coached American Legion

> Baseball in summer 2001. "David will always be > remembered as an enthusiastic and energetic respected and popular with person," Theta Xi President Jarrod Reimer "He was very well

both his brothers and his fellow students.'

Reimer said fraternity members have begun the healing process.

"Everyone has been deeply affected by this tragedy and has pulled together," he said. "Everybody handles situations differently, but we all have been there for each other to talk to about what's on our minds."

Miller graduated from Wilson High School

School counselor Jane Dreiling said he would be missed by students and staff.

"He was the kid who always had a smile on his face," she said. "He always knew where he was going and what his future held. That's why this hurts us so much."

Dreiling said the death hit the close-knit school and community hard.

"I wish we would have known what was going on. I wish he would have told someone," she said. "But that wasn't our good fortune."

Miller's funeral will be at 11 a.m. Thursday at the First Baptist Church in Wilson, K-State students are welcome to attend. A campus memorial service still is pending.

Miller's death marks the third K-State student to die in 2002. Fifteen students died in

Sex predator act is proved constitutional

BY MICHAEL WATSON Konsas State Collegian

Committing sexual predators for care and treatment makes sure they are not in the community, director of communication for Attorney General Carla Stovall said.

The United States Supreme Court, for the second time, upheld the constitutionality of the state's Sexually Violent Predator Act.

KBI offender

owed to county, city, code or name of

In a 7-2 ruling, the U.S. Supreme Court found Jan. 22 that Kansas must only prove serious difficulty in a sexual offender's ability to control their dangerous behavior and not a total lack of control to commit them for treatment.

The ruling was handed down in Kansas v. Crane, which was personally argued by Stovall.

"This is a Kansas victory," Mary Tritsch, director of communication, said. "Total control does not need to be shown. This will help protect the community from sexual predators by getting offenders treated."

Richard Seaton, attorney in the law firm Seaton, Miller, Bell and Seaton, said sex crimes happen in Manhattan, whether people see them or not. Seaton said it is hard to rehabilitate the offenders.

"The problem with sex offenders is you can't make them better," he said. "That's the reason for the extra supervision. To keep sex offenders out of the community until they are

Bush says terrorists still threaten America

BY RON FOURNIER

WASHINGTON, D.C. - President Bush said Tuesday night that tens of thousands of terrorists still threaten America - "ticking time bombs, set to go off" - and promised to stalk them across the globe. In his first State of the Union address, he pledged a battle of equal vigor to revive the ailing economy.

"We will prevail in war, and we will defeat this recession," the commander in chief said. standing before Congress and the public with heroically high approval ratings.

Nearly five months after the Sept. 11 attacks that shocked the world, Bush pledged to push the war on terrorism beyond Afghanistan to a dozen countries that he said harbor terrorist camps. He also warned of "an axis of evil" of nations like North Korea, Iran and Iraq, and said the United States would not allow them to threaten the world with weapons of mass destruction. Offering chilling evidence of terrorists' plotting, Bush said U.S.

forces in Afghanistan found diagrams of American nuclear power plants hidden in terrorist hide-outs.

Bush entered the packed House chamber to boisterous applause from Republicans and Democrats alike. Seconds into his speech, he made a fist, and tapped it lightly against the podium as he declared that despite terrorism and recession, "the state of our union has never been stronger.'

Democrats, responding to Bush, sought to show unity on the war while reinforcing differences on domestic policy.

House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt's words for terrorists were similar to Bush's: "Make no mistake about it: We are going to hunt you down and make you pay." But he also challenged GOP positions on Social Security, taxes and health care.

In a 48-minute speech interrupted by applause more than 70 times, Bush urged Congress to pass his tax-cutting economic package and challenged Americans to commit two years or 4,000 hours to community service.

He hopes to tap the surge in patriotism since the attacks.

"We can overcome evil with greater good,"

the president said. Amid extraordinary security, leaders of the congressional, judicial and executive branches gathered beneath the same Capitol

Rowing for a reason

Members of the rowing team work out on the rowing machines Tuesday morning at the K-State Student Union. Ten percent of the money raised was donated to Habitat for Humanity.

Drew Rose/

Rowing teams raise money during daylong event

Kansus State Collegian

This is an event about building, Ruth Ann Wefald, said. The rowing team is building a boathouse and Habitat for Humanity is building houses.

The sixth annual daylong Rowing for Habitat for Humanity event in the K-State Student Union on Tuesday raised about $25,000.

The K-State and community chapters of Habitat for Humanity, volunteer programs that build houses for lowincome families, received about $4,000 from rowing teams in addition to the pledges Habitat volunteers raised.

"The women are dedicated to Habitat for Humanity as well as raising funds for a team house that will be built at Tuttle Creek," Coach Sandra Chu said.

Sophomore rower Lara Schrock said the team house will be very beneficial to the team.

"Right now what we row from is a big, cement block. It's just a roof for the boats," she said. "In the new building we will have showers and a team room, instead of having to come back to campus. It will allow us to concentrate on rowing."

Schrock said it also is a good event to raise awareness about the team. There are 55 members on the team now, but she said they are always looking for new teammates.

While a facility with showers, restrooms and a team room to analyze video are important, Schrock said, the main reason the team rowed in the event was to raise money for Habitat for Humanity.

This year, team members collected a flat fee for rowing for one hour in the rowing machines on campus instead of collecting pledges for how far they rowed. They raised about $9,000 more than last year.

"I think if we get a major donation for half the project, the university will allow us to break ground this winter," Chu said. "We will continue to do fund raisers and we are also trying to contact alumni of the program."

Coach Jenny Hale said the building will allow the teams to be more competitive. She said it is hard to compete with other schools that have million-dollar buildings for crew teams.

Not only would a building be good for the team, but it would give alumni a place to meet when they come to K-State for races, Hale said. She said alumni support would strengthen the program.

"This benefits clubs too, not just varsity rowers," Hale said. "There is a junior program and there are summer camps. There are about 200 users a day out at the boathouse."

K-State athletic coaches added a little competition to the event. Kristen Knight, women's golf coach; Susan Fritz, volleyball coach; Sue Serafini, assistant basketball coach and Deb Patterson, women's basketball coach challenged Willie the Wildcat to a 200 meter rowing race. Serafini won the race.

"Willie has a big head," Patterson said, "but Coach Sue beat him anyway. Don't let Willie talk smack about winning

In another race, Patterson went head-to-head with crew coach Jenny Hale. Hale beat her in the 200 meter race by 25

"Coach Hale did to me what we are going to do against Texas today," she said. "Kick their tail."

Both the men's and women's rowing teams helped out in the row for the Habitat for Humanity event at the K-State Student

MCC tenants express communication, rental demolition concerns

BY BRYAN SCRIBNER

Kansas State Collegion

Manhattan Christian College junior Laura McFarren was surprised when her husband told her their rental house would be demolished this summer.

The college made a decision Wednesday to tear down seven of its 15 rental houses within the next year, and McFarren, a K-State junior in secondary education, said tenants were not given proper notice.

Vice President for Business Affairs Lori Jo Stanfield said students living in the seven houses marked for demolition were informed of the decision Thursday. She said notices were delivered to on-campus or residential

McFarren said a story about the decision in Friday's Collegian, and the notice which she received in her mailbox Friday, provided the first indication that her house would be torn down. She said this was too late.

"As landlords, they should have at least let us know about it," she said. "At first, they said no plans were in place to tear them down."

She said a quarterly newsletter never mentioned the possibility of rental housing being destroyed. Tenant meetings regarding the issue also did not take place, she said.

Stanfield said she understands McFarren's

"I'd be upset if someone were to tell me that my house was being torn down," she said. "We would have notified them better had the Collegian not forced my hand."

A Dec. 15 attic fire at 1418 Fairchild Ave., one of the rental houses, influenced the college's managers to make the decision. The house will be torn down along with the six other residences. All are about 70 years old. Over-heated electrical wiring caused the

As a result of the fire, Aaron Fangman, resident of MCC housing, said she and her roommates were asked to move from their house at 1404 Fairchild Ave.

A notice Jan. 4 stated that electricity in the house would be disconnected for repair. The tenants' lease subsequently was terminated.

The notice released the residents from their financial obligations and management offered the roommates a lease at another rental complex owned by the college, which was accepted. The students also were offered the same rental agreement as they had previ-

Fangman, freshman in business management, said she recently was informed that the house at 1404 Fairchild Ave. also would be demolished, but she and her roommates had been expecting to move back in once the electrical problems were repaired. Therefore, the security deposit has not yet been given to the students because the house has not been cleaned for its check-out inspection.

Fangman said she does not think the tenants should be expected to clean the house to collect their deposit.

"I'm not cleaning anything," she said.

"They were saying that we were going to move back in it."

Stanfield said the house's stove, blinds and refrigerator need to be cleaned before the security deposit is given back. She said the tenants were not aware at the time of their lease termination that the residence would be demolished, but cleaning was Twenty-four people received citations from the State Alcoholic Beverage Control (ABC) in Manhattan on Jan. 25 and 26.

The ABC, an organization in charge of enforcing state drinking laws, charged 19 people with minor in possession, along with five citations for furnishing alcohol to minors.

While more charges were made against minors, the ABC equally targeted those supplying alcohol to minors. Gayle Martin, of the Kansas State Department of Revenue, said the ABC typically makes arrests the first weekend of fall and spring semester, but will check periodically throughout the year.

In August, the ABC gave 66 citations.

"The numbers often vary on account of what type of weekend it is." Martin said

She also said there are more activities in the summer with outdoor parties, where as in the winter most are confined to bars.

The ABC works alone or sometimes in conjunction with the local police departments.

Witnesses say Enron might have skewed energy prices

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A sharp drop in long-term electricity prices after Enron declared bankruptcy raises questions about whether the company might have been using largely secret trades to manipulate energy markets, a Senate hearing was told Tuesday.

An energy consultant testified that in the week after Enron announced its bankruptcy, the forward price of electricity in the West fell sharply. Enron had been a key trader in this market, which is used as a hedge against future power price changes and is unregulated "That certainly raises the question about whether Enron was manipulating the West Coast market" by keeping prices artificially high, said Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., in response to the consultant's testimony.

Robert McCullough, the consultant whose clients include several Northwest utilities, said "the clear implication is that Enron may have been using its market dominance to set forward

Other energy experts said other reasons might have been behind the price decline, which McCullough described in Senate testimony as 30 percent, but later in an interview acknowledged was closer to 20 to 25 percent during a two-week period before and after Enron filed for bankruptcy Dec. 2.

WHAT DO YOU WANT TO BE WHEN YOU GROW UP? K-State professional describes basics of degree program

Philosophy major

How many hours are required to graduate? 36 for a traditional bachelor's degree, 39 for pre-law option, 42 for pregraduate school option

What careers could I pursue with this major? Students could pursue anything related to business, ministry, economics and anything where knowing how to write clearly is important. Sixty percent of majors are doing the pre-law option. What are the advantages/disadvantages of this major?

Some advantages are that majors learn a general liberal arts education, and they are trained how to reason and write clearly. Knowing how to do these things allows majors to pursue a lot of different job options. Is graduate school typically required? No, the majority of majors do not go to graduate school. However, we've increased the requirements of the pre-graduate school option in order for the students to be more prepared for graduate school.

Wade said the coffee served will remain the same after the name changes. The change from a national ownership to one with local ties occurred by chance, he said.

He previously had worked for Espresso Royale in 1990 as a student and then spent seven years in its corporate office in Ann Arbor, Mich., as a management trainer.

Radina said he left the coffee business in Michigan for a job in Denver because it had become too corporate. He worked in Denver until being hired as a business instructor at K-State last summer.

Now, he is back in Manhattan, working as an instructor in the College of Business Administration and owner of Espresso Royale until the name changes next month.

Wade might be the poster child for what the Manhattan area Chamber of Commerce and the economic development committees hope becomes a trend of alumni wanting to own businesses in Manhattan.

"A lot of our emphasis is going to be focused in on the alums who have left Kansas State," said Harry Watts, director of economic development for the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

"I like studying here much better than compared to the 24-hour study room," Matthew Hoppock, sophomore in psychology, said. "It appeals to me because it is easier to study since there are less distractions and because there is coffee."

Hoppock said the beverages and food served at a coffeehouse are not the only things that attract customers-the mood of the shop does as well.

"People feel comfortable in this atmosphere," Hoppock said. "There is a soft mood to the music and the lighting isn't fluorescent."

Thaine Bray, manager at Java, said coffeehouses provide an alternative for those who want to visit Aggieville, but don't want to go to a bar.

during the next five years, maybe we should pay more attention to the group ultimately responsible for this increase: the Kansas Legislature.

As we hear about the suddenly chronic revenue shortfalls facing our state, it might be advisable to ask, "where has all of our money gone?"

The answer lies in the partisan politics of the mid '90s.

During the economic boom of 1993-2001, the Kansas government experienced large surpluses in tax revenues.

Prudent advice at the time whispered that we should save some of that money for a time when the economy would slow down and revenues would fall

However, being the fiscally conservative, economically responsible group it is, our Legislature decided to give the money to their already-rich friends.

One form this took was highway spending. Kansas has some of the best highways in the nation. But these highways are constantly being torn up and rebuilt for no

The answer to this mystery lies in a close look at the roles of political and campaign contributions to Kansas' elected officials, from the Governor on down.

According to the Kansas Governmental Ethics Commission (www.accesskansas.org/ethics), many of the contributions to our Governor and our Legislature come from highway construction companies and their owners.

Meanwhile, large corporations like Wal-Mart or Archer Daniels Midland (ADM) continue to get deals with state and with local governments which exempt them from paying property tax, portions of their sales tax and corporate income tax

(www.salinakansas.org/legpolicies.htm). This means that long standing local businesses are being forced to pay for large chain stores to come in and destroy them. Not only is this wrong, but it doesn't make

In 1997, the Legislature made large cuts in the state income tax, especially targeted at the upper income brackets, while privatizing many of the state's services.

This allowed rich Kansans to receive state money for their own businesses to accomplish poorly and inefficiently what state employees had been doing well for many years.

Our Legislature did all this instead of devoting money to the aging infrastructure of the state's higher education system, which now is in sore need of updating. This money could have been used to do many things

K-State are having trouble hiring and retaining both the number and quality of professors that are necessary for us to be a first-rate educational institution. Additional state money could have been used to raise faculty pay.

This is proof that our Legislature has failed its college students and, ultimately, all Kansans.

Despite all this, I believe that it is not too late. Call, write or e-mail your Kansas senators and representatives. Tell your parents to do the same. Tell all your family and friends and your teachers too. Tell your ministers, your scout and 4-H leaders. Tell everyone you know.

When all of these people get in touch with their Legislators, they should tell them:

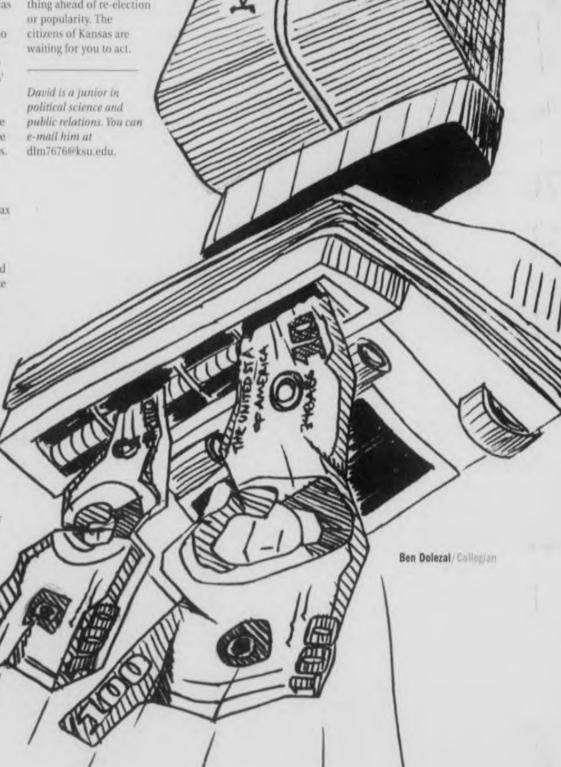

The time for short-sightedness is passed. You can no longer deflect blame for failing our higher education system nor pretend the problem doesn't exist or

Fox News covers more than biased angle

n today's era of liberal biased broadcast journalism, the Fox News Channel is a breath of fresh air with its broad coverage of all points of view.

The Fox News Channel has done what no other network has done- showcase points of views from all perspectives and ask tough questions to those who have misbehaved. Media coverage is supposed to be unbiased. Unfortunately, with the exception of Fox, this has not been the case. During the eight scandal-laden years

President Clinton was in office, the coverage of most of his corrupt and illegal acts was meager at best.

The issues of Clinton's campaign fundraising, Chinese espionage, and the Juanita Broaddrick rape allegation were not delved into with the depth they should have been by ABC, CBS and NBC

Colby Gordon

All the major networks are guilty of left wing journalism, but the most blatant culprit is CBS.

I lost respect, as a journalist, for evening news anchor Dan Rather after he spoke at a Democratic fundraiser in Austin, Texas last year.

Rather also stated that he thought Clinton was an honest man even after Clinton lied under oath on national television to the whole country.

Clinton and Richard Nixon will be remembered as the two most corrupt presidents of the 20th century. Things are not any better on cable. CNN, sometimes known as the Clinton News Network, is the most guilty of being lenient toward the left. Ultra-liberal owner Ted Turner clearly has an impact on the left wing point of view his news network takes.

In a desperate attempt to pull ratings from Fox's "The O'Reilly Factor," CNN recently hired Connie Chung, a liberal news journalist with a checkered ethical past. Hillary Clinton recently appeared on CNN because she knows she will not have to answer inquiries about her questionable behavior. However, Senator Clinton dares not venture onto Fox because she would get asked questions about the Whitewater debacle or using taxpayers' money to campaign in New York.

Other examples include PBS giving Bill Moyers, the Rush Limbaugh of liberals, a new program. National Public Radio, which is blatantly liberal, slams its view in your face using taxpayers' money. When was the last time you heard a pro-life or any kind of conservative view on NPR?

Fox News has been labeled as a conservative network; this is due to Fox presenting all points of view, including the conservative voice, which is negated on all the other networks.

Because you actually see a conservative viewpoint, Fox is going to seem right-winged.

A station that employs obvious liberals like Alan Colmes, Geraldo Rivera and Greta Van Susteren cannot be labeled conservative.

Some networks are more liberal than others, but all fail to present the conservative viewpoints regularly and keep people accountable for their actions.

Fox News asks the tough questions, presents all views, people that can back those views up with facts and lets the audience decide for themselves.

Career Fair Expo useful for students

Kansas State Collegian

Students crowded the K-State Student Union Ballroom on Tuesday for the first Spring Technology and Engineering Career Fair Expo.

The event, sponsored by Career and Employment Services, K-State's Multicultural Engineering Program, the College of Engineering and the Management and Information Systems Student Organization, lasted from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

"I think this was a better opportunity for me to look for summer internships," said Samatha Gangapuram, graduate student in computer science.

Gangapuram said the career fair in the fall really didn't focus on summer internships as much, even though some of the same companies were at both fairs.

"The fall career fair didn't concentrate a whole lot on summer internships because I think a lot of the companies were looking for fulltime positions. I'm glad the companies are focusing more on internships and not just full-time jobs,"

B.J. Smith, systems analyst for Exxon Mobile, said the spring fair is a tool to help students prepare for "A lot of companies have already hired for summer positions," he said. "The market is saturated as it is and students may find it difficult to get a job. That's why it's important for them to get their names out there as soon as possible.

because we like the course work the university provides to students in the engineering field," she said.

Malloy also said course work has made the engineering students qualified candidates for the job

"We're looking for well-rounded students who are focused on ideas and are confident and experienced. K-State seems to push those qualities," she said.

The business and agriculture students will get their shot at the job market Thursday at the Business and Agriculture Career Fair Expo. The fair will be from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

KSU awarded $65,000 for agriculture development

BY MICHAEL LAWRENCE

Kausas State Collegian

The U.S. Department of Agriculture will award $65,000to K-State's College of Agriculture Thursday.

The money will fund Isolation of Maize Genes Controlling Defense Reactions to Pathogens of Cereals.

Scot Hulbert, the principle investigator of the project, said it is the second installment of a two-year $130,000 grant. The grant was given to K-State under the U.S. Department of Agriculture's competitive grants program.

Hulbert said this money will fund research on the development of pathogen-resistant plants.

He said there are more than 8,000 species of grass out there and a virtually unlimited amount of genes. If it is successful, there will be a way to develop pathogen-resistant plants faster than the pathogen itself can Hulbert said he already sent in a request to the USDA to renew the grant for a third year.

"We seem to be getting a lot of useful information from this," Hulbert

decision appropriate

On Tuesday, the Nevada Athletic Commission denied Mike Tyson the chance to fight Lennox Lewis on April 6 in what many are calling the biggest fight in the last 10 years.

Immediately following the announcement, I swore I heard Dwight Gooden, Darryl Strawberry and Tyson breath a collective, "Huh?"

This time, ethics won. The announcement came as a bit of a surprise to financial experts paying close attention to the potential fight. As it turns out, Tyson's childish and frightening behavior is too steep a price to pay for the multimillion dollar shot in the arm Nevada's economy would have received following the bout. "We're there to regulate and protect the integrity of boxing," Commissioner John Bailey told the Associated Press earlier this week. Believing that Tyson's return to a Nevada casino would do anything but drag boxing's reputation (and I do use that (erm lightly) through the mud was a hard pill for me to swallow before the announcement. Afterward, I breathed a sigh of relief.

Dan Smith

I do believe in second chances, though.

I'm not perfect, and to tell the truth, I've even had my license suspended (driving, not boxing), so I can understand where Tyson is coming from. But the Commission's actions yesterday were both prudent and necessary.

Talk is now surfacing about what other venues will attract Tyson's shenanigans. To whatever sanctioning body willing to take that risk, I have just a few issues.

What if someone other than Lewis is injured?

Whereas buying a ticket to a boxing match usually is considered a safe and entertaining purchase, fans attending the match might want to take an extra look at the pepper spray and ear protection sections the next time they make a trip to Wal-Mart.

And what about the brave soul chosen to keep the peace that spring night? Tyson's targets haven't just included boxers in the past. In his bout with Orlin Norris a couple years back, Tyson landed two punches after the bell. One hit Norris, the other hit Tyson himself told the media he wasn't "Mr. Politically Correct" in an apology statement after last week's melee with Lewis at a New York press conference.

But I can tell you're not convinced Tyson is a threat. You need more evidence that Iron Mike is a little more than unstable and that's why you're still reading.

Since feasting on Evander Holyfield's ear in a 1997 title fight, Tyson has: fessed up to allegations he was trying to break Francois Botha's arm in a fight, went after Lou Savarese after their bout, ruined the spirit of Christmas by throwing ornaments at reporters in Cuba, threatened to "eat Lewis' children" and is now facing charges regarding a 2001 rape case.

In fact, the chances of Tyson flying off the handle between now and the beginning of April are actually increasing, said William Hill. Hill, an English bookmaker in London, has actually taken more bets on Tyson being disqualified than for either fighter to win.

But finding examples of Tyson's hissy fits is the easy part in all of this.

Fixing boxing's black eye looks to be a bit harder at first glance, but the solution to the problem might be the easiest option of all.

Why not boot Tyson? Instead of throwing your credibility out the window, show Iron Mike the door and make sure it kicks his butt on the way

Nevada has taken the initiative. Now let's hope it sets a precedent and Tyson never gets to fight - or hurt again.

Tyson court | K-State to begin 3-game home stretch tonight

Kinnas State Collegion

K-State's search for conference win No. 2 won't get any easier in the coming week.

The Wildcats are set to play three games in the next six days. Texas, tonight's opponent and the only unranked team in that group, still holds a 5-1 record in the Big 12.

Not exactly prescription medicine for Coach Jim Wooldridge's club has lost five of its last six games by an average of 14 points and is coming off an 86-74 loss at then-No. 18 Missouri on Jan. 26.

But the optimism remains intact.

"I think we're playing pretty well as a team right now," junior Matt Siebrandt said. "We're not winning yet and it's frustrating, but we've just got to keep on playing, and keep on fighting."

K-State did have its share of positives to take from the MU loss, though.

The Cats committed a season-low eight turnovers. They had five players in double figures for the third time this season, led by Larry Reid's 19 and Tony Atchison's seasonMidweek matchup high 17, and Siebrandt and center Pervis Pasco combined for 21 points and 15 boards in the second half alone.

Wooldridge's club even cut the lead to seven with three minutes left, before the Tigers hit 12-of-14 free throws down the stretch to

Siebrandt said the team is eager to get over the MU loss tonight against Texas, but it won't

The Longhorns started the year 1-3. Two of those losses came from Carrs/Safeway Great Alaska Shootout in Anchorage. Since then, Coach Rick Barnes' boys are 13-2 and have won seven of their last eight.

"Texas is one of the teams in the league that might be the most physical," Wooldridge said Tuesday. "They remind you of Oklahoma - and we've seen them. They're playing great defense right now, they rebound the ball well and it looks like they're playing with a lot of confidence.

"They're also a team that's a proven road team, and that's an indication that they're an upper-tier program in this league.'

The Horns, who are 20-7 in Big 12 road games over the last four years - the best mark in the conference - are led by sophomores Brandon Mouton and Royal Ivey, posting 12.8 and 12.4 points-per-game, respectively.

Yet, it's only been due to injury that Texas has produced it's biggest star this season. Sophomore - 6-foot-8 center James Thomas has stolen the show in Big 12 play.

Thomas is averaging a double-double -12 points and 10.8 rebounds - in conference play this year, and his numbers on the glass rank him third in the league.

"It was a big blow to lose (Chris) Owens, but they're so deep," Siebrandt said. "Thomas is just as good of a player in my book, and it's going to be a big challenge for us inside."

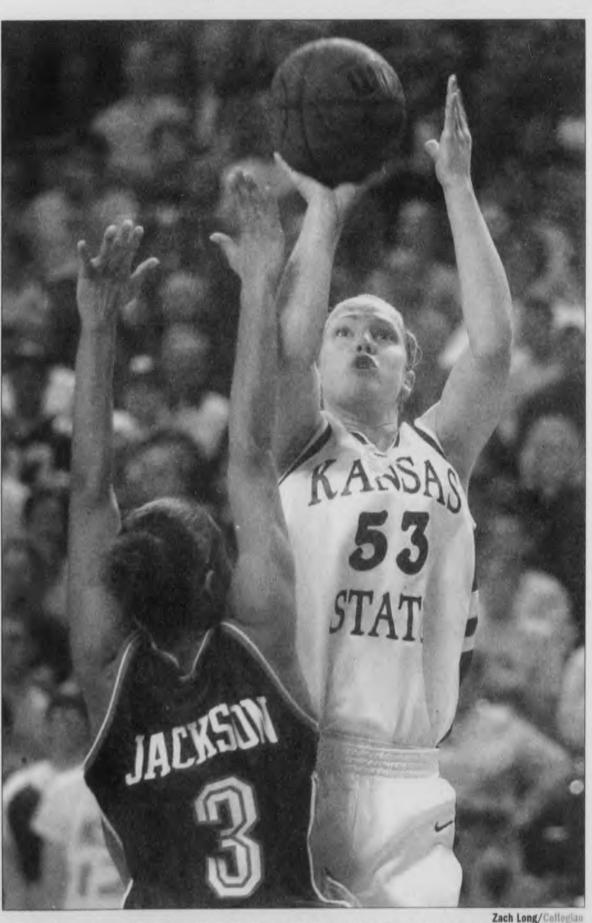

Wooldridge understands that, too. especially since teams have hurt the Cats

It's getting to be old hat for Laurie Koehn.

For the third time this season, the 5foot-11 guard from Hesston, Kan., earned the Big 12's Rookie of the Week

After scoring 21 points in the Cats' Jan. 23 matchup with Kansas, Koehn finished the week with 13 points on 5of-5 shooting Sunday in K-State's 76-63 win over then-No. 12/13 Texas Tech.

The redshirt freshman also averaged three rebounds and two assists in the Cats' wins over the Red Raiders and Javhawks.

Monday's announcement marked the eighth time this season a K-State player has claimed the award, including Koehn's two previous stakes Dec. 10 and Jan. 14.

Koehn, who has 80 treys entering Wednesday's contest with No. 14/14 Texas, leads the team in scoring (18.1 ppg) and three-point field goal percentage (44-percent), and leads the nation in three-pointers, averaging 3.8

The rookie has accounted for nearly half of the Wildcats' 165 three-pointers this season and has scored 20 or more points seven times.

Koehn also is starting to make her mark on both the K-State and Big 12 record books. Koehn broke the Wildcats' freshman record for three-pointers in a season Jan. 16, when she surpassed Kim Woodlee's 1997-98 total of 67.

Koehn also is tied for sixth on the Big 12's single season three-point list with Iowa State's Megan Taylor, and is four away from moving past Woodlee (83) into the top five.

Cats look to hold conference lead on trip south

Karuna Statu Collis

The K-State's women's team enters tonight's game at No. 14/14 Texas with more than just a win over a ranked Texas team under its belt.

The Cats are coming off an experience that is almost impossible to repeat. Against Tech on Sunday, K-State missed just four shots in the second half and sophomore forward Nicole Ohlde

"I don't believe you can play at that pinnacle game in and game out. That was extraordinary, but I think it raises the confidence level of what we're capable of sustaining for

During the second half, Ohlde dominated the paint by scoring at will but also by passing. When Tech collapsed on Ohlde with double and triple teams, she dished to her teammates for layups and finished with eight assists for the

That performance also was a credit to the whole team, Patterson said.

"We've made improvements in helping her to be a better passer, too. It's easier to pass when your teammates are being great targets. No. 9/10 K-State (19-2, 7-1) will need another team performance tonight against the Longhorns (14-4, 6-2), who have four players scoring in double digits and one of the best post players in the league in sophomore Stacy Stephens. "Stacy Stephens has great hands. She can jump over you.

She's an excellent offensive rebounder. She's got a sweet turnaround," Patterson said. "It's hard to stop her in the paint when she catches. She has a solid 15-foot stroke. Her ability to shoot over you and get offensive boards makes her a threat every time up the court."

Texas will also have the home-court advantage. To make matters worse for the Cats, the Longhorns just lost to Baylor at home, leaving Texas with something to prove tonight.

"You've really got to be on your game because not many people win in Austin and the thought of them losing two in a row I'm sure is a very maddening thought to them right now," Patterson said.

Nonetheless, the players are ready to face the hostile

"I think when we go on the road, we have to be ready to provide our own energy," freshman guard Laurie Koehn said. "At Bramlage, it's not hard to have a lot of energy for the game because of the fans. We just have to come out ready to go and it shouldn't be a problem."

The Cats' new top-ten ranking also won't be a factor in the game, especially since the last time the team was ranked ninth, it lost on the road at Oklahoma State, Ohlde said.

"We were there once and we ended up losing, so you've got to not worry about that," she said. "It's great that we're ranked that high, but Texas is up there, too, so we've got to go out there and play hard."

All in all, K-State will have to play very well just to be competitive, Patterson said.

"They just lost one at home, so they're going to be very, very aggressive. It's key that we establish ourselves on the board. We have to be prepared for a great deal of pressure," She said. "They've got a fabulous attack inside and out. It's going to take an excellent game on the road to be competitive with this great Texas team."

he wit of Gilbert and Sullivan will be brought to McCain Auditorium for a new generation of theater-goers. On Thursday, the duo's most popular comic opera, "The Mikado", will be shown in McCain and Richard Martin, director of McCain, said seeing a big Gilbert and Sullivan production is a treat not commonly available in Kansas. 'There hasn't been a full-scale touring production ever come through here," he said. "These tend to be more elaborate. It's great fun."

The history of Gilbert and Sullivan and how they came to write "The Mikado," has received more attention recently due to the 1999

Academy Award- nominated "Topsy Turvy." The opera, written in 1885 and set in Japan, tells the story of the Mikado's son, Nanki-Poo, who is betrothed to the elderly Katisha, but falls in love with Yum-Yum, a ward to Ko-Ko, an executioner. While the comedy is set > in Japan, many of the tongue-in-cheek jokes are jabs at the British system of government and the nobility. Though the opera originally was written for late 19th-century Londoners, none of the jokes are too dated to be funny, Martin

> > "The opera satirized ancient Japanese culture. It's a spoof of British society," he said. "It's glorious fun for people even without really understanding all of the jokes.

"The music is infectious. You'll leave humming the songs." A La Carte is the production company behind this touring show and is led by Gilbert and Sullivan aficionado Richard Shelton, who plays the Mikado

"The Mikado" has become such a highly revered work that Martin said the best surprise for those who know the work will be that there aren't surprises. However, for those unfamiliar with Gilbert and Sullivan, the irreverent wit and humor will likely catch people off-guard.

"Gilbert was an excellent lyricist and he often surprises people with the nature of his rhymes," he said. "I personally put them in the same category as the Marx Brothers.

Martin said students shouldn't let unfamiliarity keep them from the show.

"Students, backgrounds are so far removed from this kind of jolly and fun show today," he said. "But it's solid enough that it can still speak to people today."

Student photos on display in Kemper Gallery

BY COURTNEY DUFFIELD

Kansas State Collegia

Photographers shoot to win. The Union Program Council sponsored the Student Photography Contest. From Jan. 22 to 25, 20 entries were received, with contestants paying $3 per photo entered.

Megan Hughes, UPC arts and entertainment chairperson, said the contest happens once a year in the spring. The entries were judged last weekend in four categories - animals, people, still life. and building structures and landscape.

Jeff Smith, UPC director of graphic arts and design, said he enjoyed judging and there were many good photographs, but that the matting and framing was not the best he has seen. Walter Bleser, senior in civil engineering, won best in show for "Life of the chain."

Smith said he and Jeff White, senior in fine arts, picked the best in show by hanging up all the photographs and looking at them. He said they kept coming back to Bleser's photograph because it was eye-catching and made good use of color and space.

'Life of the chain." is a color close-up picture of a chain.

"It was one of the most interesting pieces I have seen in a long time," Smith said. "It made great use of positive and negative space."

The best in show winner won $50 and the first place winners in each category won $30, with second place winners receiving $20.

"Basic Criteria were originality, competition and technical aspects," Smith said. "There were a lot of talented people and I am glad they turned their work in.'

After the best in show was chosen, they picked first, second and sometimes honorable mention placers in each

Photography awards

First place winners in each category: Alysha Lewis for animals, Chris Schiffelbein for people, Katy Bockelman for still life, Gloria Schwartz for building structures and landscape, Walter Bleser for best in show. Photographs will be on display in the Union Kemper Gallery until Feb. 8.

Contestants entered the contest for numerous reasons. Some art majors wanted to see how their work held up against other photographers.

Jessica Barnes, second place winner in the animals category, said some just find photography interesting and wanted to share their photographs.

"I am just fascinated with photography," Barnes, sophomore in English. said. "I think it is amazing how they catch our emotions and I want to pursue it for the rest of my life."

Barnes entered two photographs in the contest. Her photograph in the animal category shows a bird's nest in an evergreen tree with two baby birds. She said she picked her entries by looking through the photographs she already has

"I thought they were the best of what I have so far," Barnes said.

Smith said his favorite categories to judge were people and still life, the category in which Bleser's photo was entered.

Smith has judged the contest in the past and said the best part about it is getting to see the contestants' work. This year's contest brought entries from photographers in a variety of fields, Smith said.

"It was a diverse number of entries, but I would always like more to choose from," he said. "I was glad to be asked to judge again. It was nice to see the work and nice to see people from other majors having entered the contest."

Snyder hires 3 coaches for football staff

BY DEREK BOSS

Kanam State Colles

A trio of new faces will be pacing the sidelines of KSU Stadium next

Coach Bill Snyder hired three new assistants during winter break, including a replacement for Defensive Coordinator Phil Bennett, who resigned Dec. 5 to take the head coaching position at Southern Methodist. Bobby Elliott, associate head coach at Iowa State the past two seasons, will take over Bennett's duties, Snyder announced Jan. 5. Snyder and Elliott were both assistants under Iowa Coach Hayden Fry from 1987-88.

"I have followed and admired. Bobby Elliott for many years since our time together at the University of lowa," Snyder said via press release. "He has always impressed me as a truly great football person, a great teacher, motivator, technician and recruiter and an even greater person and family man who has overcome tremendous adversity in his life.

"Bobby fits in very well with the other defensive coordinators we have had over the years."

Replacing Bennett wasn't the only task for Snyder this off-season. though. The coaching carousel was still in full swing.

Not only did Bennett leave for SMU, but he took three Wildcat assistants with him. Defensive ends coach Bob Fello, linebackers coach Jim Gush and graduate assistant Bob Stanley all followed Bennett to Dallas. Texas, leaving Snyder's staff a bit thin.

In turn, the Cats' coach hired Bret Bielema, formerly the linebackers coach at lowa, as the linebackers coach and co-defensive coordinator on Jan. 10.

A week later. Snyder elevated Del Miller, a member of his original coaching staff at K-State in 1989, to a full-time coaching position.

Miller, who spent last year in an administrative role at K-State, will be in his eighth year in Manhattan.

"Coach Miller is a true professional, a dedicated family man, a loyal and hard worker with a great deal of experience and a wealth of knowledge about our program and how it needs to work," Snyder said.

The Cats' coach also spoke highly of Bielema and the 32-year-old said he was very receptive to the Wildcat

There are a lot of close ties and with the lowa connection, I've been familiar with the program," Bielema said in a Jan. 10 press release. "To come to Kansas State and be a cocoordinator is a great opportunity.

All three new coaches are expected to speak to the media following the Feb. 6 signing day.

inside this season. For instance, against Missouri in Manhattan, center Arthur Johnson put up a season-high 23 points and 15 rebounds as the Tigers rolled to an 81-66 victory.

"Thomas has really taken up the slack," Wooldridge said. "He's just playing at another level. He might be the most aggressive player we've seen so far this season."

Whatever the odds, K-State must remain positive, Atchison said.

He seems to be. The senior guard has hit double-figures in five of his last seven games, and is averaging

10.9 points during that span. "We are working really hard right now, and it will pay off for us," Atchison said. "We're tired of losing, and it's got to start coming around for us soon."

OFFENDERS Continued from page 1

The law allows Kansas to commit sexual predators to the hospital for treatment as long as officials prove offenders' difficulties to control their

Kansas v. Crane involves Michael Crane, a Johnson County man, who a jury determined in 1998 to be a sexually violent predator. He was arrested after a 1993 assault on a Leawood video store clerk.

Crane was sent to Larned State Hospital in Larned, Kan., for care and treatment. Crane appealed the decision to commit him to Larned because he said the court failed to prove he was unable to control his dangerous sexual behavior.

In July 2000, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of Crane, saying he could control his behavior enough to enter into transitional living, and sent the matter back to Johnson County District Court for a new trial.

Prosecutors would be unlikely to seek a retrial because the mental condition from his initial commitment has substantially changed and doctors said he is no longer a threat.

Tritsch said treatment at Larned teaches offenders to realize why they commit sex crimes.

"Avoiding what you know helps you avoid the crime," she said.

For instance, a pedophile should not go to a convenient store near an elementary school to get a pack of cigarettes shortly after 3 p.m., because they may not be able to control their behavior, she said.

With treatment, sexual offenders learn a new behavior and would realize that if he wants cigarettes he needs to go to a convenient store that is further away from the school.

MCC

necessary for sanitary reasons. Although Fangman and McFarren said they were upset by a lack of communication, both agree that the decision to tear down the houses is the right one. "The houses are old,"

McFarren said. "They need to be "We knew these houses weren't going to be here forever." Old wiring, poor plumbing and other maintenance problems exist in the seven residences that will be torn down. The decision was based on these concerns.

John May, physical plant director, said electrical problems exist because wiring is being overloaded with electrical devices.

The older houses cannot supply high-energy demands, he said.

The decision, he said, was made with students' safety in mind.

"The same problem could happen at any one of the houses," he said. "They're pulling a lot more amperes than they should be pulling."

K-State graduate Sarah Schultz has been living in MCC housing for four years. She does not rent one of the houses that will be demolished, but she said she has been happy with the college's rental management. Some of the people who are unhappy, she said, are not communicating well with the college.

"I think the longer I've been here the better things have gotten," she said. "I've had a lot less issues."

Anthony Inchaustegui, MCC

senior in pastoral ministry, said his rental house would be torn down along with the others. Since the school is struggling to provide safe housing because of financial limitations, he said they've made the right move.

"The thing that I understand about MCC housing is they're trying to do the best with what they have now," he said.

However, the decision also will mean that more than 40 residents will be forced to find another place to live. Some K-State students live in the houses.

Students will also be forced to give up inexpensive rental rates. Most of the residents pay about $100 each per month.

Fangman said it's tough to give up the low rates.

"The MCC students especially like the cheap housing because their schooling costs twice as much as K-State students'," she Stanfield said the MCC staff would not be able to guarantee that all of its students would be able to find similar rental agreements in the future.

"We're in the position we're in because we try to find inexpensive housing," she said. "It will hurt tenants in their pocketbooks." In Friday's story, Stanfield said parking lots and an expanded student center would replace the houses. This construction, though, will not occur for about another five years. The spaces will remain vacant during that period.

Most of the college's 15 rental houses are divided into three separate two to four bedroom apartments. The residences are spread out between 14th and 17th streets and Laramie Street and Fairchild Avenue.

Sales soar in stores

Parking cost, fine increases proposed

Kansas State Collegian

Parking permit and parking ticket prices at K-State might soon be going up.

Darwin Abbott, director of parking services, said the council on parking operations is proposing an increase in both tickets and permits to help with the cost of maintenance done on various parking lots.

"Last year really took a toll on our parking lots," Abbott said. "The cost of parking services updates the parking lots in cycles. This year, they will do work on the West Stadium lot among other lots.

Maureen Lockhart, chair of the council on parking operations, said there will be a $5 increase on permits for faculty, staff and students. The tickets also will be raised various amounts. The $5 ticket for an expired meter will be raised to $8. Also, the $15 ticket for no valid permit or not parking within a marked stall will be raised to $18 and the more expensive violations, such as the $85 ticket for forging, altering or stealing a permit will be raised to $95.

Abbott said that since the ticket prices weren't raised last year along with the permit prices, the council thought they should be this year.

"If the cost of permits goes up, the cost of tickets ought to be raised equally," Abbott said. "Otherwise, it is unfair to the people who bought the permits. We don't want to have a situation where it is cheaper to get a ticket than to buy a permit."

Abbott said that despite the increase in prices, students will benefit from the maintenance done on the lots.

"Students will get better lighting and better surfaces in the lots," Abbott said. 'Also, they will benefit from our increased capability to remove snow with an antiicing agent we use."

However, some K-State students feel

Philip Weltmer, junior in animal science and industry, said he'd be against a raise in prices.

"We already pay $65 for the permits, and still have to wait for a spot when we get to campus," Weltmer said. "I can't see any major problems with the lots, and it seems like they could find funding for maintenance in other places."

Tana Henton, senior in golf course management, lives about 20 minutes from campus. She, too, said it was frustrating that after paying for a parking pass, she wasn't guaranteed a spot.

"If they need more money for maintenance, maybe they could charge more for permits for people who live within a certain distance from campus," Weltmer said. "There are a lot of people who could walk, but they drive instead."

Lockhart said there will be an open forum in April. The public is encouraged to come and voice its opinions and concerns. She said council members don't make the final decision on raising the prices; they simply make recommendations. "We submit a report to Dr. Thomas Rawson, who is the vice president for administration and finance, and he meets with the president's administrative council to make the final decision," Lockhart said. "Dr. Rawson could decide not to take our recommendation, so nothing is set in concrete."

Lockhart said a decision might not be made until April.

"We are still in the process of putting together a list of proposed changes, Lockhart said. "At the end of February, we'll forward the recommended changes to Dr. Rawson, and he will handle it from there."

Winter storm forces university to close

BY BRYAN SCRIBNER sas State Collegian

Closing the university Wednesday made it the second cancellation since last winter, a decision that President Jon Wefald said should only occur once every 22 years.

K-State officials closed the campus Feb. 9, 2001, after ice and about six inches of snow presented safety hazards. The closing was the first of its kind in 22 years.

One year later, another shot of ice and snow canceled classes. The wintry mix, though, came after temperatures were in the mid 60s last week. Wefald said administrators are watching the fluctuating weather pattern closely.

'We might not have another day like this during the winter." he said. "I'll play it by ear and try to make the best decision."

Meteorologists on Wednesday were predicting as much as eight to 14 inches of snowfall to accumulate by the time the storm ended. Wefald said he couldn't predict if school would take place today. out he said another cancenation was not

"The last thing in the world that the faculty wanted is for school to be called

"That's why we didn't call off school for 22 years.

Assistant Vice President John Fairman said rain and ice below the snowfall would make for hazardous driving conditions. He said the safety of staff, students and faculty driving to campus was the main reason for the cancellation.

K-State used advanced weather prediction equipment to make the decision. The equipment, located in the K-State Police Department, was also used last year.

"That makes you a little more cautious," Fairman said. "We do have a lot of students that live on campus, but there's potential for accidents."

Vice President forn Rawson made the final decision about 12 a.m. Wednesday, Fairman said. Division of Facilities personnel cleared sidewalks and plowed parking lots most of the day.

Fairman said closing the campus gave workers the opportunity to clear the snow without the restriction of vehicles on campus. He also said school would most likely resume today.

Although the ice and snow shut down campus, Fairman said Kansans are used to the unpredictable weather.

"This is really an unusual winter," he said. "I'm sure everyone's been enjoying it, but we needed the moisture.

"Isn't it fun to be in Kansas?"

Students find snow day entertainment

BY AMBER KOEHN Kansan State Collegian

Cameron Dolbee was in shock when she heard school was canceled on Wednesday.

'It was completely and utterly amazing that Wefald canceled school," said Dolbee, senior in mechanical engineering.

Dolbee and his friends spent the day sledding down the hill at Cico Park.

"We started out with cheap cardboard boxes, but those didn't work," said Dolbee. "Somehow we ended up with sleds." Some students chose to be pulled on sleds behind vehicles.

'We went to Kmart to get'gloves and saw the sleds by the doors," said Steve Richardson, junior in marketing and advertising.

Richardson drove his truck while John Shea, freshman in kinesiology, and Micah Intermill, freshman in marketing, took turns being pulled on a sled from behind.

"I think Wefald should cancel classes Thursday, too," said Shea.

Richardson, Shea and Intermill are members of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity, and Richardson said the entire house was excited for the snow day.

"I think the whole house was up at 8 a.m.," said Richardson.

Dolbee said this snow day was better than last year's.

"I just slept last year," he said. "This year I had nothing better to do, so I thought I'd come out and have a good

"This snow day is the pits. I overslept after finding out at 6 a.m. that we didn't have to go to class," he said, "and I wanted to go to work early."

Detrick said he prefers warmer weather to the freezing temperatures and he doesn't care for snow at all.

"I prefer 100 degree weather with lots of humidity," he said.

"A winter snow is just plain depressing."

Detrick said he agreed with Wefald's decision to cancel school, but didn't care if classes were canceled today.

"If Wefald canceled classes again, I wouldn't say anything really. I know of many students on campus who are sick as

The GAO's statement that it will take the White House to court sets up a political battle over executive privilege. Bush on Monday flatly refused to hand over the documents, saying to do so would encroach on his ability to freely seek outside views.

The GAO and congressional Democrats want to force Vice President Dick Cheney, who ran the task force, to turn over documents on meetings last year with business executives in crafting a national energy policy.

Some of the participants in the meetings were officials from the nowcollapsed Enron Corp., a Houston-based energy trader with deep ties to Bush.

Feds leave federal funds interest rate unchanged

BY JEANNINE AVERSA

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Experts say the worst of the recession might be over when the Federal Reserve left a key interest rate unchanged Wednesday, which ended a yearlong stretch of uninterrupted credit easing.

After 11 consecutive rate reductions in 2001, Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan and his colleagues opted to keep the federal funds rate — the interest that banks charge each other on overnight loans - at 1.75 percent, the lowest level in 40 years. The decision was announced after a two-day closed-door

"Signs that weakness in demand is abating and economic activity is beginning to firm have become more prevalent," the Fed said in a statement explaining its decision. "With the forces restraining the economy starting to diminish ... the outlook for economic recovery has become more promising."

On Wall Street, stocks rallied. The Dow Jones industrial average, based on preliminary calculations, closed up 144.62 points at 9,762.86, with the index gaining back part of Tuesday's big loss.

Commercial banks' prime lending rate, the benchmark for millions of consumer and business loans, has dropped in lockstep with the Fed moves and continues at 4.75 percent, a level last seen in November 1965.

The Fed began cutting rates Jan. 3, 2001, and ordered its last rate reduction Dec. 11, its final meeting of the year. Those rate reductions were designed to revive the economy, which was ailing even before it slid into recession in

STATE IN BRIEF

New system alerts parole officers of parolees' arrests

WICHITA - A state system automatically alerting parole officers of their parolees' arrests is expected to be operational by year's end, four years after the brutal murder that prompted it.

The new system will send an electronic alert, probably an e-mail, to a parole officer if one of his parolee's is apprehended, said Gordon Lansford, director of the Kansas Criminal Justice Information System.

But for the new system to work, more law enforcement agencies will have to join the Criminal Justice Information System, Lansford said. About two-thirds of the state's law enforcement agencies, mostly small police departments, have not joined the free system, he said.

Currently, officers rely on less systematic checks, like a visual scan of arrest lists, or on parolees themselves, to notify them of an arrest. Sometimes an arrest goes unnoticed.

That's what happened in 1998, when Wichita parolee Stanley Elms was arrested on a drunken driving charge and released from the Sedgwick County jail. Parole officers apparently missed Elms' name on an arrest roster.

Three weeks later, while on a fourday drug binge, he raped and murdered next-door neighbor Regina Gray, authorities say. He's now on death row.

If his parole officer had known about the DUI arrest, Elms' supervision could have been increased and he could have been tested for drugs.

After Gray's death, the Kansas Department of Corrections said it hoped to have an automated alert system in place by the beginning of 1999.

FBI director reassigns head of national security division

NEW YORK - The FBI director reassigned the acting head of his national security division, one of the bureau's highest-ranking women, over her investigation into whether China tried to recruit a spy against the United States, The New York Times reported Wednesday.

FBF Director Robert Mueller made the decision about a week ago to replace Sheila Horan, people familiar with the decision confirmed for The Associated Press. During 1998, Horan headed the investigation into the bombings of two U.S. embassies in Africa, which led investigators to al-Oaida followers of Osama bin Laden.

Mueller notified Senate oversight committee members and on Tuesday personally explained his decision during a closed-door Senate briefing. Horan was reassigned to an administrative position.

Sources said Mueller told senators he had serious concerns within the division, which investigates reports of spying in the United States, and outlined the changes he made.

The Times, which first reported Horan's reassignment, said Mueller lost patience with her for failing to aggressively investigate suspicions that China tried to recruit a spy against the United States.

Candidates announce SGA intentions

Kansas State Collegian

The newest student body presidential candidate said he plans to give students the most benefits he can and still keep tuition costs

Candidates Chris Greene, junior in pre-law and business management, and Greg Woodyard, sophomore in accounting, officially announced their intention to run for student body president and vice president to the crowd at Smith Scholarship House on Wednesday.

Greene will run for president and Woodyard will run as vice president. They are the second pair of candidates to enter the presidential race.

"Our campaign is to improve students' lives while at K-State,' Woodyard said

Greene and Woodyard are focusing on three campaign issues: implementing a grading scale that will benefit the student by better reflecting the grades they earn in the classroom; expanding and publicizing the current shuttle system, and opening up parking at Bramlage Coliseum and other locations to shuttle students to campus; and to work with the K-State administration to get more time for students to relax during dead week.

"We want to keep tuition costs low for students," Greene said.

Couldn't they have staged the scene somewhere else, like Tennessee or Arkansas?

For that fact, why is it that every time Kansas is mentioned in a movie, we have to be portrayed as a truckload of tobaccochewing, toothless hicks armed with pitchforks and double-barreled shotguns?

What is worse is that somewhere in Kansas these stereotypes hold true.

Right now, someone is smiling a toothless grin, knowing he is doing a good job fulfilling his role in society by proudly wearing a mustard stain on his Nascar

Restaurant to open in spring

BY SARAH RICE

Big burritos and tacos will add to the flavor of Manhattan this spring with the opening of Chipotle restaurant in Aggieville.

In May, the restaurant will fill the vacancy on north Manhattan Avenue, which Hardee's previously occupied.

The restaurant menu features gourmet food at a low price, said Dan Fogarty, director of marketing at the Chipotle headquarters in Denver.

"You build your own burrito or taco," Fogarty said. "The ingredients are all fresh. We grill it up throughout the day."

He said the chain had received requests at their restaurants in Kansas City and Lawrence for an opening in Manhattan.

"We try to find a location that is central for everyone in town, but allows everyone to access it," he said. Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said she was excited about the new addition to the district.

"It gives us another place to dine in Aggieville that will attract even more people to Aggieville to shop and dine," Sieben said.

Neighboring business, Espresso Royale, Caffe will benefit from the addition too, Manager John Hays said.

"Generally, when you have an empty building, you see a change in business," Hays said. "It will definitely give us more foot traffic and exposure."

The first Chipotle site was near Denver University and now has eight to 10 locations in college towns, Fogarty said

"It's great food, affordable and served quickly, which fits a student's schedule," he said.

However, Chipotle does not consider itself a fast-food or Mexican restaurant.

"It is fast, but not fast-food," Fogarty said. "Nothing is greasy.

Everything is fresh and healthy." Fogarty said they try to create an upscale atmosphere with common features such as stainless steel tables and birch wood.

Sieben said she thinks Aggieville attracted Chipotle because of the district's success.

"We have a real close proximity to the university they probably wouldn't have gotten in other areas," she said. "They have parking, too. There is a lot of business action in this area."

Fogarty said not only do they try to appeal to students, but they like to contribute to the community as a

"A large part of what we do is giveaways," he said. "We try to make the community a better place to live."

KSU Alumni Association to allow membership before graduation

RV JAMIE RARRETT Kansas Stata Collegian

Being a member of the Alumni Association does not necessarily mean being a graduate. Beginning this spring, the Alumni Association will offer student membership to any K-State student through the KATS enrollment system. The program is designed to encourage students to get involved in the association before graduation, so they will see the benefits of the association after graduation, Courtney Marshall, director of member services, said. "This has been in the works for several years," Marshall said. "Other universities such as Iowa State and KU have the program. but we just have not had the ability to get it off the ground until now."

The membership, which will cost students $15 per year, will be available for students to join through the marketplace section of KATS when they enroll for fall classes, Marshall said.

"We are making it just like if you were to order a Royal Purple or tickets when you enroll," she said.

The program is another way for students to get involved on campus, Marshall said. The student program will have activities such as cookouts and tailgates and will

2 complete dinners for only $14,99 + tax

even have their own governing structure that will give students opportunities to hold offices.

"There are only so many spaces on SGA or in other activities, Marshall said. "This is an opportunity to get involved, especially for freshmen or transfer students who need to meet other students."

With the completion of the new Alumni Association building scheduled for fall, Amy Renz, president of the association, said there have been many ideas for how the association can grow. The student membership program is one way for the association to have better contact with students.

"The association provides a link and a lifelong connection to K-State," Renz said. "This program will provide more interaction with association members and students. We want the students to be more interested after college.

Marshall said the Alumni Association often is misunderstood by students when they believe it is only there for the benefit of alumni. She said the new program will be a chance for students to utilize the space at the new center.

'Students don't always understand what we do," Marshall said. "They don't realize the Alumni Association has tailgates and pep rallies. We want to get the students involved and to be a part of our functions."

When a student becomes a member there will be added bonuses, like discounts with their membership card, Marshall said.

"We're trying to get support from the Aggieville Business Association, the Manhattan Main Street and the Chamber of Commerce to get discounts and benefits for our members," Marshall said. "At this point, everything is conceptual, but it will be finalized by the time enrollment

The program hopefully will change students' minds about the purpose of the Alumni Association, Marshall said.

"The association is a home to alumni, friends and students," she said. "With the move, we want to bring students to the building and the association and keep their interest in our program."

AUSTIN, Texas - Laurie Koehn scored 28 points, and Nicole Ohlde had 24 points and 11 rebounds Wednesday night, propelling No. 9/10 K-State to an 80-76 double-overtime victory over No. 14/14 Texas and Stacy Stephens. K-State (20-2, B-1) reached 20 wins for the first time since the 1989-90 season and got its first victory in Austin to hold on to first place in the conference. Stephens led Texas (14-5, 6-3) with 33 points and 17 rebounds.

A three-pointer by Texas' Asha Hill tied the game 66-66 with 35 seconds left in regulation, but her three-point attempt at the end of the first extra period rattled off the rim, sending the contest to a second extra frame.

Tied at 73 after the first overtime, a baseline jumper by Kendra Wecker and a turnaround floater in the lane by Ohlde put the Wildcats up 77-73.

Wecker finished with 19 points and 10 rebounds

Jim Wooldridge walked back onto the Bramlage Coliseum floor and raised his hands proudly in the air, saluting the 5,220 fans that fought the wind chill, snow and ice to be in attendance Wednesday

His Wildcats (8-10, 2-5) had just upset Texas (14-6, 5-2), the No. 2 team in the Big 12, 71-70 Wednesday night, shooting a blazing 50 percent from the floor to pick up win No. 2 in conference play.

"That's a big win for us, and we talked about going into the game being upsetminded," Wooldridge said.

The kids found a way down the stretch to win the ballgame, and I'm just proud of them and excited for them. I hope it builds some confidence that they can be successful."

With K-State down by two, 70-68, and just 44 seconds to play, guard Phineas Atchison provided the heroics.

The Cats' guard knocked over Longhorn defender Fredie Williams but no call was made, and drove down the right sideline, hung in the air, and hit the lay-up as he was fouled by T.J. Ford.

'He tried to flop a little bit right there," Atchison said of Williams, "and I started to shoot the three, but I hadn't been shooting it good all night, so my best bet was going to the hole. Fortunately, I came up with the basket.

After Atchison hit the free-throw, Texas moved the ball around the top of the K-State zone, and Ford tried a spinning 12foot shot from near the free-throw line with two seconds left.

The Horns tried to tip, but the ball ricocheted off the glass and to the floor.

"It was a big sigh of relief," Siebrandt said. "We really needed that win. We had lost seven of our last nine, and we needed to protect our home court, and we did." Tied at 31 at halftime, Texas looked to take control of the second half early. The Horns used a 12-4 run and two three-eight-point lead. But K-State fought back, and gained its first lead of the game, 47-46, with 12:04 to

Each team would trade advantages from that point on, with neither team leading by more than four, and the score found itself knotted at 66 with 2:19 to play.

From there, center James Thomas went 2-for-4 from the line, Cats' guard Larry Reid hit two free throws to tie it at 68, and Royal Ivey hit two charities to push the UT lead to two before Atchison's late drive proved the gamewinner.

Reid led the Cats with 17 points, while Atchison chipped in 15 on 6-of-13

Thomas topped the Horns' charts with 20 points, and teammate Brandon Mouton added 18, with 14 of those points coming in the second half.

The difference tonight was that when we were behind, we scored a few points and we didn't let it get out of hand," Wooldridge said.

Cats' scoring runs spark comeback win

Cold weather conditions outside

Bramlage Coliseum had no effect on K-State's ability to shoot the basketball against the Texas Longhorns on Wednesday night.

The Wildcats scorched the net at a 53.8 percent clip in the second half, finishing the game at 50 percent, in route to a 71-70 victory.

Despite sizzling after intermission, it was a late first-half run that kept the Cats in the contest. During a 13-6 stretch in the final 4:55 of the first frame, K-State relied on production from all players, including reserves Travis Canby and Gilson DeJesus and starting senior forward Matt Siebrandt, to get the Cats to intermission,

"We were really fighting out there and giving it everything we had," Siebrandt said. "There were 20 minutes to decide the ballgame so we knew we had to keep playing hard, and thankfully, we came away with a victory."

This is the column I never thought I'd write.

My friend David Miller died Monday, which probably means very little to many people. Even though you might not have known Dave, you probably saw him once or twice. He was the guy who played pick-up basketball games at the Rec like the fate of the world was on the line.

He was the guy you didn't want to guard. Dave was one of the finest all-around athletes I've ever known. He was fast, quick

Michael Noll and unbelievably competitive, Guarding him was torture, but playing with him could also be tough because he made everyone else work just as hard as he did.

Dave was the kind of athlete that could begin a sport, and a few hours later, be better than a normal person who had been playing for months or years. He was the kind of guy that could only sit still for about 10 seconds before he had to move. He was also a good person - likable, goodlooking and fun to be around. But, that isn't why I

What I will never forget is how he could play basketball, which I suppose might seem to be a trifling legacy for a human being. He had more noble qualities.

He was loyal to his friends, and most notably, to his sister. She was born with a handicap that would never allow her to play a sport even one-tenth the way Dave could, and yet he still loved her and probably would have done anything for her. But his loyalty isn't the reason I'll remember him. Neither is his big, goofy grin that looked like it came from some caricature artist's drawing. No, the way he played basketball at the rec or in the parking lot at our fraternity - smooth, fluid and twice the speed of everyone else - is what will remain ingrained in my Dave could move with or without the ball, shoot and pass and he had an uncanny ability to draw the foul when he drove to the basket. Sure, it might have been a charge some of the time, but nobody was going to argue with him.

Most of us knew that we were lucky to have even gotten a hand on him. The last time I played basketball with Dave, his team got on a fast break once, and the only thing that stood between him and a wide-open layup was me. I ran in front

Afterward, he admitted the play was close and he didn't know how the ball actually went in the basket. Then, he said, "Noll, there is no way you will ever block my shot. That was true, of course. I couldn't have blocked his shot in a hundred years, but I still didn't like to be told so. I thought he was being arrogant. Then, he flashed that giant smile and I realized that it wasn't cockiness. For him, that statement was like an English graduate student claiming that he or she could write a better essay than a kindergartner.

It wasn't arrogance. He was just that good. Unfortunately, it turned out that Dave was right. I never played ball with him again and I never blocked his Craig said many students said they went out to get alcohol because they didn't have anything else to do.

Not all liquor businesses did as well due to the snow day. Chad Lohman, co-owner of Nespor's Wine & Spirits, said although he had done better than usual for a Wednesday, the loss of a rush-hour pick up in business would likely mean no more profits than usual.

So far, Lohman said he had more students, Fort Riley soldiers and construction workers visit the store than usual with increases in beer sales. For cold days, Lohman said he prefers alcohol in warm drinks.

"Liquor warms you up," he said. "Later on. I'll probably have some Irish cream and coffee or hot chocolate."

Other types of business experienced a rush of students as well. Steve Barnum, manager of Blockbuster Video, said he estimated the store would do about twice as much business than usual, Barnum said when students get bored the lawsuit will be filed.

It would be the first time in the GAO's 80-year existence that it sued the executive branch.

The lawsuit would be filed in the U.S. District Court in Washington. D.C. The White House said it had not received notification of the lawsuit.

"The president will stand on principle and for the right of presidents and this president to receive candid advice without it being turned into a news release," said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer.

White House officials, fearing political fallout from the legal action, scrambled to raise questions about the GAO's actions.

GAO officials also were calling congressional leaders Wednesday to tell them of the decision.

The White House said Kenneth Lay, then chairman of Enron, gave Cheney a three-page document in April arguing for federal authorities to refrain from imposing price caps or other measures sought by California officials to stabilize electricity prices. Lay was one of Bush's biggest political supporters.

"Events in California and in other parts of the country demonstrated that the benefits of competition have yet to be realized and have not reached consumers," the memo said.

Cheney spokeswoman Mary Matalin dismissed the significance of the memo, first reported by the San Francisco Chronicle. Nine of Lay's 11 suggestions were not included in the White House energy plan - and the two that made the report were noncontroversial, she said.

Some of our patients go to bed at night knowing the next day will be clear and bright, thanks to a procedure called Corneal Molding. They simply put in special contact lenses before going to bed... and wake up to clear vision that lasts all day. Its non-invasive and about half the cost of lasik.

We'd like to tell you more about it.

Thursday, January 31 @ 7:30 p.m.

sponsored by Farm Bureau Financial Services

In this faux Japanese tale a young man leaves home to avoid a forced marrage only to learn that even marriage to the girl of his dreams is frought with tragic consequences. With bitingly saterical lyrics by W.S. Gilbert and a delightful score by Arthur Sullivan, "Mikado" has proved an audience favorite for more than 100 years. Opera a la Carte's production is in the D'Oyly Carte tradition, featuring period ostuming and orchestra.

Remnants of storm forces half-day closure

Kansas State Collegian

On Wednesday, classes were canceled for the second time in 22 years. And Thursday, students once again had a break from a full day of class.

President Ion Wefald said canceling classes Wednesday was necessary to keep everyone safe, but he said he felt it was safe to resume classes by noon

"It was not a difficult decision," he said. "We felt we could get ready by noon.'

All classes before noon Thursday were canceled. "We hate to cancel classes." Wefald said, Yet, due to the weather and the possible danger that drivers and pedestrians faced, Wefald said it was necessary. Wefald said officials decided to reopen the university at noon on Thursday due to serious weather analysis and preparation.

The decision was made by administration, K-State Police and the Division of Facilities in what Wefald said was a team approach.

Ronnie Grice, director of campus police, said he has been monitoring the weather since Wednesday night. Grice said administration asked for his input on the weather.

He said he has been in contact with a meteorologist service based in Wichita. The service gave Grice a relatively low chance of additional precipitation.

"Today, based on what we were predicting, classes were opened up," Grice said.

John Woods, director of facilities, said everyone has been working hard to keep people safe once campus

Woods said the construction crew has been working since Tuesday night.

The crew removed the ice and snow off the roads by shoveling and dropping a salt and calcium-chloride combination.

Grounds crew came in at 4 a.m. Wednesday and Thursday morning to clear off sidewalks, steps near sidewalks and handicapped-accessible areas.

Custodians have been working since 6 a.m. both Wednesday and Thursday to clear off building entrances.

Kook Kim, senior in accounting, gives a high five to Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration, after getting a $1,000 pledge at the 2002 Telefund on Thursday night. The pledge came from Max Maurice Polk, Topeka, who received a bachelor's degree in business in 1952.

University campaign begins after weather delay

Kansas State Collegian

An all-volunteer telephone campaign for higher education has kicked off its 23rd season at K-State.

Telefund 2002 set its goal of earning $1.4 million in 24 nights through calls made by an estimated 1,600 volunteer student callers. Volunteers started making calls Jan. 27 and will continue through Feb. 25.

Bad weather kept volunteers from making calls Wednesday night, but they returned Thursday night. As of Thursday afternoon, the amount earned was $207,489

"We want students to get involved and want to help out," Gordon Dowell, director of annual giving and Telefund, said. "It really is an exciting place to

The student-driven and alumni-supported campaign, launched in 1980, has benefited all nine academic colleges.

Telefund 1999 was the first to surpass $1 million in pledges, and last year it reached more than $1.3 million.

"This is one of the largest money-making campaigns on campus and we hope that students and faculty can see that many of our funds come from Telefund," Dowell said.

K-State's Telefund has climbed to fourth nationally and first in the Big 12 Conference. "The program is huge and it's amazing to see where K-State stands when compared with other universities," Dowell said.

Goals for the campaign include contacting as many people as possible to raise money, which will benefit programs on campus.

"Telefund is a fun experience and the night never gets boring because they constantly hand out different prizes."

Suzanne Blakely, sophomore in finance and management information systems

If Telefund 2002 can achieve this, then K-State will maintain a 22-year tradition of pledge and participation totals.

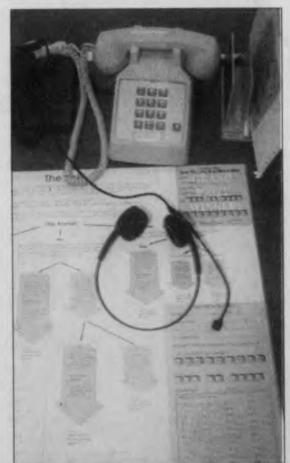

With the theme "Tour de Cats," Telefund 2002 works to provide an environment for everyone. Students from all colleges are encouraged to participate and will be recognized with a collection of prizes, valued at more than $70,000, which are donated by several businesses and organizations.

"We want to provide an environment that is fun and attracts people to come and be a part of the campaign," Nicole Fraker, senior in management,

"There are a lot more prizes this year and our goals are higher." Four large prizes will be given away during the Telefund, including a Dodge Neon. Other prizes are a $1,000 student scholarship, a picnic for 30 and a campsite package.

"Telefund is a fun experience and the night never gets boring because they constantly hand out different prizes," said Suzanne Blakely, sophomore in finance and management information systems. "It's awesome to see how much revenue actually comes out of the Telefund each year."

All nine colleges participate in Telefund, trying to raise money from their alumni. Students who take part in Telefund have a chance at winning scholarships along with many other prizes.

Organizations to celebrate black history

BY LINDSEY BURKET

It is an event with a tradition older than its history. Americans first recognized February as Black History Month in 1926. Since its creation, the month has become a nationwide celebration of black culture.

"Appreciate and Celebrate Black History Every Day," will be the theme surrounding the month's events at K-State. Campus organizations sponsoring events during the month include the Black Student Union, the Student Organization, the Black Panther Party and the International Student Center.

"African-Americans have made many contributions throughout history," Maurice Parks, BSU president, said. "There are too many things to put into one month. It's something that should continue to be celebrated every day."

Headlining the festivities at K-State this year are several nationally known speakers. Thomas Barksdale will serve as the keynote speaker for the month and will speak at the BSU meeting at 7 p.m. Feb. 12 in the K-State Student Union's Forum Hall.

Barksdale, a motivational speaker, has made national appearances speaking to young people on how to improve themselves academically and socially, and wrote the book, "It's All About You - A Young Adult's Guide to Positive Living."

Also speaking during the monthlong celebration will be Negro League Baseball player and coach Buck O'Neil. O'Neil made history as the first black coach in the history of Major League Baseball when he agreed to

School, business closings help prevent accidents

The Riley County Police Department said accidents due to inclement weather were minimal. thanks to schools and businesses closing their doors.

Lt. Mike Quintanar said closing businesses kept people off the streets, which decreased the chance for wrecks.

"We had beefed up our staff a little on the day shift because that's when a lot of accidents happen," he said.

"But, I think the closings really helped out because people stayed in. The accidents weren't what they could have been had businesses not been closed."

Other than increasing staff, Quintanar said procedures for the day did not change.

There isn't much we can do," he

He said they did field many calls about safety, however, and assisted a lot of people who were stuck in the snow

To prevent accidents, Quintanar said, drivers should slow down, give themselves more time to get where they are going, and remember that the road isn't dry.

As for the campus, K-State Police Assistant Director Bob Mellgren said there were no accidents caused by weather conditions.

"Everything is pretty much normal." Mellgren said.

Deadline extended in threat to kill kidnapped reporter

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan - An e-mail sent Thursday by the kidnappers of Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl extended the deadline for killing him by one day.

The unsigned e-mail was received by Pakistani and Western media.

"We will give you one more day." the message said. "If America will not meet our demands, we will kill Daniel. Then, this cycle will continue and no American journalist could enter Pakistan."

The unsigned message said that unless the kidnappers' demands are met, "the Amrikans (Americans) will get what they deserve."

The e-mail said the Pearl abduction was not the end and threatened a "real war on Amrikans," who it said will "get the taste of death and destructions what we got" in Afghanistan and Pakistan.

A similar e-mail sent Wednesday had said Pearl, the Journal's South Asian bureau chief who disappeared Jan. 23 in Karachi, would be executed after 24 hours and demanded all American journalists leave Pakistan within three days or become targets.

The Wall Street Journal and Pearl's pregnant wife appealed to his kidnappers to spare his life. "Killing Danny will achieve nothing for you," Journal managing editor Paul Steiger wrote in a return message to Wednesday's email. "His murder would be condemned by the entire world, and your group would be viewed as murderers without serious political objectives.

Q: How do I deal with my roommate's significant other who basically is a live-in roommate? Cramped companion

Dear Cramped companion:

When we first come to college, the thrill of our new-found freedom overwhelms us and we can make bad judgment calls.

Sleeping with your significant other is not an option at home in your parents' house, but at school you make the decisions, right?

Not if you live in a residence hall or share a small room with another person. No one wants to wake up to foreign morning breath, especially if the shacker isn't yours.

Try express your discomfort in a constructive way. Explain your feelings and be willing to cooperate on alternatives that make you happy, but don't break up your roommate and their flavor of the week.

However, if this is an apartment or house living arrangement then it shouldn't be a problem. If your biggest complaint is that you don't get in on the breakfast in bed every morning. then suck it op and be happy for your roommate.

Sarah is a junior in electronic journalism.

Dear Cramped companion:

An important fact to remember is that we must tolerate others, even if we don't like them. If we lived in a less civilized society, we could kill them and throw them in a pasture.

The prior solution is not feasible unless you want to be on the Discovery Channel's "Case Files: Murder in Manhattan."

If your eminent house guest doesn't offer to help around the house, "" there are some other alternatives.

Option one is to make him or her feel in the wrong about freeloading. Be so damn rude about it they will feel uncomfortable and guilty and perhaps the burn will leave.

This alternative is not ideal, as it will make your roommate angry.

Student works to make 9-month leases available

BY SARAH RICE

Kansas State Collegian

In a perfect world, students wouldn't have to pay a year's worth of rent for an apartment they would only be living in for nine months. There would be no subleasing ads in the classified section.

Maurice Parks, senior in marketing and international business, said he hopes to create this situation for students in Manhattan. After presenting his idea during an open period at Student Senate last week, he hopes to rally support for his cause, he said.

"Everyone knows a great deal of these students leave for the summer," Parks said.

"I am not saying (landlords) do it intentionally, but they are maximizing their profits, but apartment managers with the possibility of offering nine-month leases to students instead of the traditional 12-month leases.

"I am going to gather some more information with the different renters and different apartment complexes," he said. "Then maybe get together with some major players and see if that is something that can possibly be worked out."

Although Parks knows that landlords might not be excited about the issue, he said that in the end it would be beneficial for both parties.

The month's activities help highlight events in black history that students and faculty might not know a lot about. Also, many of the on-campus celebrations let students participate.

Test tubes of blood taken from blood drive donors in the Central Plains region are sent to St. Louis for testing, while the actual bags of blood donated are sent to Wichita for distribution.

Dickey said she is unsure of the actual amount of blood found to be infected after testing, but she says the number is small.

"A lot of donors are repeat donors, and chances are they haven't caught something like that in between," she said.

The blood distribution is also done within the region, meaning blood donated in Kansas usually stays in Kansas. She said blood supplies are entered into a national database, so blood can be used throughout the nation, although the region is taken care of first.

Cats seek 2nd win over South

BY DEREK BOSS

Kansas State Collegian

K-State might be riding a 71-70 win over Texas on Wednesday night, but the Wildcats' three-game homestand is getting more difficult by the day.

Coach Jim Wooldridge's club plays host to No. 9 Oklahoma State on Saturday, and then turns around to face No. 2 Kansas on Monday.

Not much time for a breather. But senior guard Larry Reid said the

Saturday showdown No. 9 Oklahoma State

K-State (8-10, 2-5) eum (13,340) So: Wildcat Radio work: WIBW-AM 580 team's thrilling, lategame victory over the Longhorns does much for the squad's morale heading into matchups against backto-back top 10 opponents. In fact, just ask the senior how important Wednesday was for the purple.

"It was needed," Reid said. "Definitely, it was needed.

"This gives us confidence now going into the OSU game - we've got another big game coming up - and hopefully we'll play the same way, and we can get another win."

Oklahoma State is coming off a 58-53 loss to No. 6 Oklahoma on Wednesday night in Norman, a game in which the Cowboys trailed by as many as 16 points. OSU didn't help itself early, making only three field goals in the first 15 minutes of the game and committing nine of its 13 turnovers during that stretch.

Leading scorer Maurice Baker, averaging nearly 16 points per game, was held to just six for the contest.

Baker is joined by three other Cowboy starters posting double figures this season: guard Victor Williams (12.3 ppg), Fredrik Jonzen (12.2) and Ivan McFarlin (10.7)

Meanwhile, Reid continues to lead the Wildcats' offense at 14.2 points-pergame while center Pervis Pasco adds an Reid led the way against Texas, scoring a team-high 17 points, and Pasco and Matt Siebrandt combined to notch 22 points inside, but it was three of guard Phineas Atchison's 15 points that proved to be the difference.

"I kept telling him down the stretch, 'Penetrate it. Penetrate it,'" Wooldridge said of Atchison. "That was the only way we were going to be able to break that defense.

Atchison did just that down the right sideline, and his three-point play with 23.9 seconds left pushed the Cats ahead by one. Then, it came down to K-State's defense

The Longhorns were forced to pass the ball around the perimeter, before guard T.J. Ford finally drove from the top-of-the-key and put up a twirling jump shot over Reid with two seconds left.

The ball rimmed out, and the tip fell awry, giving K-State their second win in conference play.

"Of all the possessions, I thought that was the hardest we played all night," Wooldridge said. "It was a gutty possession, that's how I would put it. Nobody slipped. Nobody made a mistake. We made them shoot it over the top of us for Despite K-State and Texas being at opposite ends of the conference standings, Atchison said it was a game that showed the parity in the Big 12.

"It didn't matter to us at all. We felt we had nothing to lose, so we were going to come out and play hard," Atchison

"We intended to come out and win, and that's what we did.

"This was a great win for us, and I think everybody's just going to play 10 times harder now since we got a good win under our belt.'

Tom Rouse, Hutchinson resident, sells his extra tickets before the women's basketball game Jan. 23 against Kansas.

Women's basketball increases ticket sales, fills stands

BY NICK BRATKOVIC

Rannas State Collegian

The hottest ticket in Manhattan this winter has been the K-State women's basketball team. The Cats (20-2, 8-1) have been playing to near-capacity crowds

recently, and

Saturday the team takes on

Iowa State in

sellout." Coliseum (13,340) Radio: Wildcat Sports "These are Network: WIBW-580 AM for the program," said Casey Scott, associate director for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

'It's not only the success they are having, but being able to look up and see every seat filled, people rushing down the concourse to the court, that is what it is really all about," Scott said. "That is what is so fun about it."

Such was the case Jan. 27 against Texas Tech. The two teams squared off, and the stands were filled with fans for every shot, pass and television timeout.

Before the game, fans bounced back and forth to the Wabash Cannonball, and cheered as band members played K-State fight songs after a long wait on the concourse.

Some fans traveled two hours from locations like Newton, Kan., and others made the journey from their Manhattan homes. Janae Voelker boarded the bus early Sunday evening for the two-hour trip from Newton. Voelker, a relative of sophomore forward Nicole Ohlde, said she has been to a few games before, but never like this.

"This is a lot of fun," she said. "I can remember coming last year, and there wasn't that big of a crowd.'

Ohlde would send the fans home happy, leading the Cats with 24 points. She is one of the many players who has fans coming back for more this season, as the team's record improves. She also gives the team a hometown feel, which Scott said helps draw fans to Bramlage.

Additionally, the promotions department works to offer group sales packages to various ities throughout the state. Those plans. Scott said, were set in motion before the season began

Adam Rundell, Clay Center resident, attended the game as part of his city's honorary day. He went to school with Ohlde, and the sophomore's success is what keeps him coming to the games.

"I graduated with her in high school," he said. "She is from my hometown. We were pretty good friends in high school, and K-State is good."

While group sales and ties to Kansas have made the team an attractive draw, winning has given the team its biggest jump in attendance.

Scott said the lan. 2 road win against lowa State made a difference in crowd sizes. Bramlage attendance has jumped from averaging between 2,500 and 3,500 fans before the win to 8,000 and 13,000 since then. Brian Whitesell, junior in finance, said he

With recent success and a national ranking. the K-State women's basketball team has attracted a large crowd at Bramlage Collseum. The Nebraska and Texas Tech games held near capacity crowds. Drew Rose/

"I have been to all of them. It's kind of blown up the last few games," he said. "Since we started getting ranked, everybody is coming out.

Whitesell also has watched the student ticket policy change from free admission with a student ID prior to the game to advance pick-up up to two days before the game.

Scott said the change in ticket policy was needed to account for the record number of tickets being sold. After working with the Student Governing Association, the department decided have 1,300 student tickets.

"We wanted to protect seating for students," he said, "We needed a method to get a finite count on how many students would come to a game. We were selling so many tickets that we were going to run the risk of overrunning a capacity arena."

Additionally, Scott said there hasn't been much of a response to the change in policy.

In fact, the number crunch was just the first in what could be a series of changes in the way tickets are sold at K State.

Scott said that after the season, other areas will be evaluated - a process that could affect everything from ticket prices to the way seating for games is managed.

"We want to do things in concert with Student Government. We have arrangements for football and men's basketball, and we will probably have discussions to see if women's basketball needs to be folded into that agreement," he said.

With the Cats' success, hosting a first and second round tournament game is the next challenge for the department, Scott said.

'We are getting to the point where we are coming close to maximizing our capacity," he said. "If we could do that on an every game basis, that would be awesome.

"Let's just say we think our women's program has a bright, bright future."

Wilcats set to entertain unpredictable Cyclones

Kansas State Collegian

One month ago to the day, the women's basketball team was an upand-coming team, looking to upset the No. 4 Iowa State Cyclones.

They did that, and now the roles are reversed. Saturday, the No. 9/10 Wildcats, who sit atop the Big 12 standings, take on the No. 12/16 Iowa State, who look to pull the upset.

"It's going to be a very physical and aggressive ball game," Nicole Ohlde, sophomore forward, said.

"At the same time, they are a very good running team, so we have to make sure that they don't get a lot of baskets in transition.'

"We just have to focus on being aggressive and playing our game. Iowa State is a great team and they will be ready to get us.'

K-State's victory over the Cyclones opened the Big 12 season for the Cats. Coach Deb Patterson's team has since gone 7-1 in conference, whereas the Cyclones stand 4-5 in the Big 12. However, Patterson is convinced Iowa State's conference record is not indicative of what they bring to the "They are playing great basketball right now, and I think they are a lot different team than they were in early January," Patterson said.

"They pose a lot of challenges. You have to be cognisant of Angie Welle. and at the same time, they have four players on the perimeter that can shoot the three.

"lowa State is such a potent offensive threat, and we have a lot of respect for what they can do on that end of the floor.

Patterson's concerns about an outside threat seem to be legit.

Iowa State's two star guards, Lindsey Wilson and Tracy Gahan, combined for 37 of the Cyclone's 63 points in the game. The two guards also attempted 23 shots from behind the three-point arc.

To offset that, K-State will have to buckle down and guard Iowa State's perimeter players even better than

"We have to play our defensive concepts and keep them from getting big three's and key baskets," redshirt freshman Laurie Koehn said.

"They're a great shooting team and a great penetrating team, so I think as a team we have to play solid defensively and do the things we know how to do to be successful."

New basketball ticket policy should not neglect true fans

Unless they are denied admission. And now it's happening due to the newfound success of the women's basketball team.

K-State has a lengthy history of winning when it comes to basketball, but the understood student ticket policy has been the same for years: K-State students are admitted to all nonrevenue sports free with a valid ID.

Let's clarify what non-revenue sports are: basically anything but men's football and basketball. This is where the confusion starts.

Lately, the students have been left out of the loop, and we have yet to be informed of what the situation is regarding tickets to the hottest show in the land.

On Jan. 22, the Collegian ran a story relating where and when students could pick up their free tickets.

This seemed sensible enough. Due to the recent success and excitement surrounding the team, women's tickets were flying out of the box office at Bramlage

This made it seem Sports Information and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics were looking out for students by making sure tickets were available.

Since then, things have gone downhill. For the Jan. 27 game against Texas Tech, there were no articles and no flyers. No one I

The crowds will come and go, but true fans talked to knew what was going on - an

view

Renee McDaniel

overall shortfall of information. If Sports Information and the athletic guest department have decided to hand out a limited amount of tickets prior to the games, I would hope they would let us know in advance.

Also, why has the student section not been filled with students?

If there are a surplus of students wanting to attend the games, it seems only sensible that the student sections be filled. This is not the case. In fact, I have yet to be able to stand the entire game due to older people sitting behind me.

We don't sit down at the football games, we don't sit down at men's basketball games and neither of those have proved to be nearly as exciting as a women's game. Yet we are forced to forgo our tradition and remain planted in

If you don't like the heat, get out of the kitchen. If you don't like to stand, don't sit in the student section. I feel the student body, so they don't get left out in the cold as I did.

So fellow students, fill the stands, make the student section rock and give our women the support they deserve.

University project aimsto strengthen marriages

BY SHANNON HARTENSTEIN

Kansas State Collegia

Tying the knot - and keeping it tied - may soon become easier for some Kansas couples.

Creating stronger marriages in rural communities is the goal of a project recently launched by K-State researchers. The Kansas Marital Preservation Project aims to strengthen new and existing marriages in Clay and Pottawatomie counties.

"Helping couples start off on a good foot is important, no matter where you're at," said Briana Nelson, assistant professor of family studies and human

"We're helping to bring together a network of people, including professionals and community members to help support existing relationships and prepare other couples for marriage," she said.

Nelson and Mark White, associate professor of family studies and human service, developed the program. It works with mental-health providers, clergy members and K-State graduate students to provide practical services.

'Rural counties don't always have access to this many services," White said. "We want to support what's there and make it sensitive to those counties' needs.

Through focus groups, we've tried to get a perspective of individuals living in those counties, what their needs are, their challenges and how programs have to be tailored to meet those needs."

Last year, 10,105 Kansas marriages ended in divorces or annulments, according to the Center for Health and Environmental Statistics at the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. More than 9,500 children were affected. and a minor child was affected in 52.3 percent of the cases.

White said he views the program as a way to benefit families and children.

"One of the things that helps kids is having a stable marriage," he said. Nelson said she agrees.

"Strengthening the marriage bond will strengthen Kansas families and the community in turn," she said.

The project also will include

"We're helping to bring together a network of people, including professionals and community members to help support existing relationships and prepare other couples for marriage."

Briana Nelson, assistant professor of family studies and human service

CoupleTALK, a relationship enhancement program. Charlotte Shoup Olsen, associate professor and extension specialist in family systems, developed the program to help couples improve relationships and communication skills.

"People consistently say it made them aware of committing some time to their relationship, amidst all the demands of family, work and life," Olsen said. "And it's important that they stay connected to each other. Also, any two people aren't always going to agree on everything. It gave them the tools to work through their differences."

Graduate students in marriage and family therapy will host CoupleTALK CoupleTALK has been offered since 1998 through distance education.

More than 200 people have completed the course, which helps couples strengthen their communications skills to create a more satisfying relationship, Olsen said.

Nelson said the new project might be slow starting out, but he said he hopes to increase numbers as it continues to develop and gains publicity.

The starting target is five to 10 couples in each county.

"We'd love to have every couple in the counties participate," Nelson said.

The Kansas Marital Preservation Project will provide marital checkups from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Valentine's Day at the Clay County Extension Office in Clay Center, the Pottawatomie County Extension Office in Westmoreland and the Calvary Lutheran Church in Wamego.

Super Sunday

Certain elements needed for Super Bowl parties

Kansas State Collegian

Players come and go, teams get better and worse, but Super Bowl parties will always signify the denouement of a long season.

When planning a party for the sporting event that has all but been turned into an official national holiday, certain things are to be remembered. First, get over the fact the Chiefs didn't even make it to the playoffs, and might not win a Super Bowl in your lifetime. Then, start thinking about supplies.

Walt Pesaresi, owner of Mr. P's Party Outlet, said people often buy balloons in team colors for the competing football teams for personal parties or businesses. Cups, napkins, plates, party trays and table covers are all things the store supplies with football decorations.

"A lot of people forget about the table covers," he said. "They brighten the room really fast because they're so big, and it makes it easier to clean the mess up later, too.

Pesaresi said many people are planning for parties with between 10 and 20 people. Gold and blue are selling better than the red, white and blue, so it would seem more people are cheering for the St. Louis Rams, he said.

Besides party accessories, food and alcohol are integral parts of setting up a party. Using local catering packages can make the food easy to supply. Chris Downs, manager of Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbecue, said the restaurant sells catering packages specifically for the sporting event.

Pat's is one restaurant offering a Super Bowl package that will serve about 12, and so far 25 orders have been made for them, Downs said.

Rodney Craig, Rickels Retail Liquor employee, said they have sold lots of beer and supplies for mix drinks this season.

Downs offered his advice on what to remember for

"Don't forget the ice, and remember to get beer the day before, because you can't buy alcohol on Sunday."

McCain to feature favorite children's novel

BY BETSY STVERAK

Kansas State Collegia

A favorite childhood book comes to life as a musical to entertain the Manhattan community

The musical act "Superfudge" by author Judy

Showtime

"Superfudge" will show at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium. Tickets are $6 for idents and children, $12 for the general public and are available at the McCain boxoffice, 532-6428.

Blume will be performed at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

"Superfudge" is the story about the lives of the Hatcher family, told through the eyes of 11year-old Peter Hatcher. Peter deals with the issues of growing up and his annoying younger brother

Richard Mugge, stage manager of "Superfudge," said this one-hour production has been a traveling act for three weeks now. Mugge said this performance is something people would want to see because it is enjoyable to watch.

"It's a fun, great production," he said. "A lighthearted timeless classic with talented actors." Mugge said it particularly captures the attention of children. "The kids love it. They walk out singing the songs," he said. "The 10 and 11-year-olds can relate to Peter, and the younger kids can watch Fudge being silly." Aside from other plays, Mugge said this play

"There's a lot of imagination and creativity," he said. "Most of the actors have to play more than one Theatreworks/USA decided to bring the tale to life because it has a creative and imaginitive story behind it. Patrick Dwyer, assistant to managing director, said. Dwyer said Theatreworks/USA is a professional theatre that puts on performances for youth and family audiences.

Dwyer said they chose to produce "Superfudge" because it's an all-around good story.

"We really liked the message of the family values it teaches," he said. "It's learning to deal with life difficulties as they come with a sense of humor.'

Dwyer said "Superfudge" rehearsals began in December 2001 in New York City, and the production will tour cities until the first of June 2002. With all the time that has been spent on bringing "Superfudge" together, Dwyer said those involved have seen certain reactions.

positive so far," he said. "These are the characters that these teachers and students know and love.

"It has been very

Even though teachers and students are an important part of the audiences, Dwyer said "Superfudge" performs in a variety of places.

"We perform in large performance art centers and sometimes play weekends and weeknights for families," he said. "We also go to schools for enrichment and entertainment."

Thom Jackson, marketing and development officer of McCain, said he feels this musical adaptation also will grab the attention of not only children, but college students as well. "Its not just a kiddies show," he said. "A lot of college students have children, and students can relate to the young parents' situation and the situation of growing up."

Recreational Services Office Located in Peters Recreation Complex

Circuit training and tracks provide an efficient workout

While most people come to the Rec to play intramurals or to participate in an exercise session, others come to utilize the two indoor tracks and the circuit training area. The mall track measures 8 laps to the mile, has four lanes, and overlooks the video lounge, aerobics room, and the weight and fitness area. The two inside lanes are designated for walking and the two outside lanes are for running. The track above the small gym is a great place to cool down with a walk after a workout. This track measures 14 laps to a mile and accommodates both runners and walkers. The elevated tracks are a great place to run or walk during the wintertime. The tracks are also a great place to warm up before a regular

The circuit training area is a terrific place to get a total body workout and is an excellent way for the participant to improve cardiovascular efficiency, muscular strength and endurance. The circuit area is designed into 10 or more weight stations.

These stations are set up to exercise the lower body and then the upper body to work all muscle groups. Intensity of the weights lifted can vary in Beginner - This workout follows the yellow circles. This is designed for those with minimal experience. It is often the foundation for the intermediate and the advanced workouts.

> Intermediate - This workout follows the blue squares. This is designed for those who are interested in a more intense, competitive workout.

Advanced - This workout follows the red diamonds. This is designed for those who like an intense workout. It combines the exercises of the beginner and the intermediate.

The elevated tracks and the circuit training area go hand in hand. Try stretching in the circuit training room and then doing some warm-up laps on the mall track. After warming up on the track, try one of the three levels of workouts to experience the positive aspects of circuit training!

"Take care of your reputation. It's your most valuable asset."

My Favorite Workout

Brent Miller, a senior in accounting, comes to the Rec with his friends to exercise and to stay in shape. Miller, from Hutchinson, Kansas, also likes to work out in the mornings. He usually lifts weights and runs in the mornings, and then comes back to play basketball in the evenings. Miller also likes to utilize the racquetball courts and the tennis courts as well. While Miller enjoys lifting weights and running, he really likes to come to the Rec to play basketball. That is his favorite form of exercise here at the Rec. "There are always people on or around the basketball courts," said Miller. "You can always jump in and always get a game going no matter what." Miller's motivation to come to the Rec is a popular reason. "I want to stay in shape and also stay slim," said Miller. Miller has been coming to the Rec since he has set foot on this campus three years ago. "I have also been involved with officiating intramurals, so when I come to the Rec, I have more opportunities than just working out," said Miller. When asked if he had any advice for other Rec goers, Miller replied, "Work out now while you can, so you don't have to suffer with bad health later in life."

Who's Who at the Rec

When Cindy Scheuerman's sister worked at the Rec as the public relations intern last year, Cindy knew right away that she would like to work at the Rec and get involved, just like her sister did. Scheuerman, a junior in Ag Education and Science Education, works at the Rec as an Assistant Building Supervisor. Some of Cindy's responsibilities include checking student ID's and membership cards for admittance, scheduling court reservations, sports equipment check-out, policy enforcement, and laundry duties. Scheuerman, from Scott City, Kansas, has worked at the Rec for a semester. She picked this job because of the people that she has met. "I have met a lot of people, and I have also had to deal with many different types of people," said Scheuerman. One of Scheuerman's favorite things about being a Rec employee is the chance to see friends. "I have gotten to see old friends of mine," said Scheuerman, "But I have also gotten to make new friends!" Scheuerman plans to graduate in May 2004. She would like to return to Western Kansas and be an Ag teacher in a high school. When asked about what working at the Rec has taught her, Scheuerman replied, "You have to have patience at all times, and you must stick to the rules."

Footwear.

Nonmarking Shoes Beyond This Point Intramural Mania

All Recreation Complex participants are reminded to wear athletic, nonmarking footwear in the facility. Black soled running shoes are allowed only in the weight/fitness area and on the running tracks. Court areas require a court shoe. For better traction, we recommend that users carry in their workout shoes. Open toed shoes or sandals are not permitted in the weight/fitness area.

Healthful Hints

Preventive Medicine for Keeping a Healthy Heart:

Make a splash with your workout

There are several health benefits from swimming laps, doing water aerobics, and deep water jogging that can be extremely helpful in keeping our hearts strong and muscles toned. Water is an ideal medium for exercise. Exercising in water improves the fitness of your heart and lungs, tones the body and reduces fat. It is suitable for all fitness levels from beginner to athlete. The buoyancy experience when the body is submerged results in lower impact on the spine and other joints. This greatly helps individuals who suffer from arthritis to exercise efficiently and enjoy their workout without pain. All age groups, sizes and fitness levels can achieve wonderful improvements in fitness using water exercise. Recreational Services offers several water aerobics and deep water jogging sessions for the spring semester, as well as lap swimming. Now you can enjoy the water all year long by visiting the Natatorium for a super workout!

Ice storm leaves 22 counties without power

Kansas State Collegian

Gov. Bill Graves declared a state of disaster emergency for 22 Kansas counties Thursday in response to the ice storm that left up to 419,000 people without electrical

The Kansas Division of Emergency Management is coordinating with local response agencies and out-of-state agencies to assess the damage and assist with removing trees and getting the power back on line.

Lindsay Franz, sophomore in biology and pre-veterinary medicine, said her family in Overland Park, Kan., has been without power since the storm hit Wednesday.

"Our house is still without power, so my parents are staying in a hotel," she said. "I don't think they're expected to have power until next week, maybe Tuesday. I don't know if anyone is really sure at this time."

but there was an inch of ice on all the plants. She said the weight of the ice and strong winds caused a lot of damage around her home.

"We have a lot of trees in our yard, so a significant number of branches were knocked down," she said. "Our fence was damaged and our Bradford Pear trees were destroyed. My parents were going back to the house today to assess damage and clean up branches.

Many businesses and schools were closed because of weather and lack of power throughout the region.

Franz said her father returned home from a business trip Wednesday night and did not have to go back to work Thursday. She said her mother, who works for a graphics design firm, was called and told not to go to the office Wednesday or

By Friday, power was back on at their offices and both of her parents returned to work, she said, but things still are not back to normal for Blue Valley Northwest, where her sister goes to high school.

"Blue Valley Northwest canceled school on Wednesday, and my sister has not been back since the storm hit," Franz

Franz said she doesn't know when the school will resume classes.

Joy Moser, public relations director for the Adjutant General's Department, said out-of-state agencies have been brought in to help get the power back on line.

"We help when local agencies can't help," Moser said. "We have brought in generators to nursing homes in different areas. We evaluate debris removal and get the trees removed. We also control traffic."

Moser said the department also offers people places to stay while power is out in their homes. She said most people have stayed with relatives or have their own

"People are making a lot of adjustments, and they are making things work,"

Facilities personnel work overtime to clear snow, ice

Students and faculty might have had some time off because of last week's white storm, but others were working hard to clean up campus.

Groundskeepers, custodians and construction shap workers were at work Wednesday and Thursday, clearing roads

Bil Blee, associate vice president of the Division of Facilities, said the construction shop workers, who handle large snow removal equipment, were working all day Wednesday. Rice said they might have gone over their normal 8-hour-day time limit.

"We had everyone our working," Non-said. "The grounds folks were removing anow and ice from the sidewalks, the custodians were cleaning the steps and entries to buildings and the sidewalles in front of buildings, and the shop people were working on the roads. Rice said that on Thursday morning, various people such as plumbers and other. rechnicians were helping the custodial #4ff

"They did a super job," Rice said. "I. remember coming out on Wednesday morning, and comparing the city streets to our streets. Our streets were clean."

Late field goal clinches victory for Patriots

New England's Fred Coleman celebrates the Patriot's 20-17 victory over the St. Louis Rams in Super Bowl XXXVI at the Louisiana Superdome on Sunday. Adam Vinatieri's 48-yard field goal gave the Patriots the win. It was the first championship for the Patriot's Bill Belichick as a head coach.

BY DAVE GOLDBERG

The Associated Penes

NEW ORLEANS - The New England Patriots picked the perfect Super Bowl for one of the biggest upsets ever.

Adam Vinatieri's 48-yard field goal as time expired capped a thrilling final two minutes Sunday and gave the Patriots a 20-17 win over the St. Louis Rams for their first Super Bowl victory on a day of red, white and blue.

The winning kick came after the Patriots had lost a 17-3 lead in the final 10 minutes.

But MVP Tom Brady drove them downfield 53 yards after St. Louis had tied it on a 26-yard pass from Kurt Warner to Ricky Proehl with

The key play was a 23-yard pass from Brady to Troy Brown to the St. Louis 36. Three plays later came the kick by Vinatieri, who had made two field goals in the snow to give New England a playoff win over Oakland.

The Patriots were 5-11 last year and started this season at 0-2, losing starting quarterback Drew Bledsoe in the process.

Brady, a fourth-stringer as a rookie a year ago, took over and led them to the AFC East title with an 11-5 record. But few expected them to beat the Rams, who at 14-2 had the league's best record, best offense and were trying to win their second Super Bowl in two

The Patriots had twice lost in the Super Bowl, both times in New Orleans. And it was the first championship as a head coach for Bill Belichick.

As defensive coordinator of the New York Giants 11 years ago, he won a ring when Buffalo's Scott Norwood missed a 47-yard attempt in the final seconds.

New England won on a day filled with patriotic themes inside the Superdome and high security outside.

There was plenty of drama, too, especially at the end. No Super Bowl has ever gone to overtime, though this game seemed headed that way when the Rams rallied in the fourth quarter.

Warner's 2-yard sneak with 9:31 left - his first rushing TD this season - pulled St. Louis

After holding the Patriots, the Rams got the ball back at their own 45 and needed only 21 seconds to tie it.

Favored by 14 points, the Rams were billed as the "Greatest Show on Turf." But if they expected to breeze, they discovered early that the Patriots wouldn't let them.

The St. Louis Rams are the only team in NFL history to score more than 500 points three straight seasons and are loaded with

All but three of the Patriots' points came as a result of St. Louis mistakes.

At 9:30 a.m. Saturday, Virginia Sylvester, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, died of breast cancer. She was

"It was so sad to hear," said Peter Nicholls, dean of arts and sciences. "I think she was one of the most compassionate and thoughtful people that I knew.

"She always had such a compassion for students, and I think that showed throughout her life. Plus, she was a good friend."

Shirley Olson, assistant to the dean of arts and sciences, said

Sylvester had been fighting a long bout with breast cancer that lasted three to four years. Sylvester had been cancer-free for six years before it returned.

Known by her colleagues as Gina, she is remembered for her tremendous compassion and thoughtfulness in the many positions she had during her career at K-State.

"Gina was just a really great person," Olson said.

"She had a real knack with figuring out students and problems in general. And there wasn't a person who didn't think she was their best friend."

During her more than 15-year career at K-State, Sylvester was an adviser, professor in philosophy, interim assistant dean and assistant dean of arts and sciences.

Jim Hamilton, associate professor of philosophy, said she always managed to teach one course a semester in philosophy even after she became assistant dean.

Hamilton said she was helpful and extremely easy to work with as department

"I personally think I will remember her most for her smile," Hamilton said. "She was such a terrific asset to K-State. "I think what her students and people she knew will carry from her is her sense of integrity and her ability to face all kinds of problems, while still carrying the philosophy of being honest with yourself."

Sylvester is survived by her husband, Utsab N. Chadhuri, her son, Simon; three sisters and four brothers.

Contributions can be made in care of the KSU Foundation to the Gina Sylvester Scholarship Fund.

There will be a memorial service at 10 a.m. Tuesday in All Faiths Chapel.

Kansas sets state record for bankruptcies in 2001

WICHITA - Kansans filed what is believed to be a state record number of bankruptcies last year, and more people also are seeking help with their debt payments, officials said.

Bankruptcy court clerks handled 13,940 filings in 2001, up from 11,331 the year before, said Hugh Zavadil, chief deputy clerk for U.S. Bankruptcy Court, District of Kansas.

Zavadil said he doesn't have records before 1998 but thinks that year was the previous record, when Kansans filed 13,252 bankruptcies.

Although it's too early to determine what this year will be like, Zavadil said he sees nothing on the horizon that would indicate a decrease in bankruptcy filings.

Rumsfeld says Iran allowed al-Oaeda to escape country

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld on Sunday accused Iran of letting some Taliban and al-Qaeda members escape from Afghanistan.

Rumsfeld said the United States "has any number of reports" that Iran has been contributing to instability inside Afghanistan by arming various Afghan factions. President Bush last week called Iran, Iraq and North Korea an "axis of evil" that might give terrorist groups chemical, biological or nuclear weapons.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said Iran had helped with international conferences putting together an interim Afghan government and providing financial aid to rebuild the country.

But Powell said Iranian elements were trying to gain "undue influence" in western Afghanistan and said Iran continued to work to improve its ballistic missiles and seek nuclear weapons capabilities.

Iranian officials have denounced Bush's comments and denied giving any help to the Taliban or Osama bin Laden's al-Qaeda terrorist network. Iran's government had opposed the Taliban regime in neighboring Afghanistan before the Taliban's collapse late last year.

Landon lecturer highlights past, present Americans

Kamana State Collegian

A spotlight illuminated David McCullough during Friday's Landon Lecture. Also illuminated were the Kansas and American flag, which seemed appropriate because McCullough spoke of America's past and present.

McCullough tied battles from the past to the United States' present battle with terrorism.

"We are in a deadly struggle with what might be described as enforced ignorance or enforced inequality," McCullough

McCullough is the author of several books, including "Truman," which received the Pulitzer Prize for biography in 1993. He also wrote "John Adams," which is among the fastest-selling nonfiction books in history, according to Publisher's Weekly.

Besides being an author, he also has experience as a writer and editor of Time magazine. He has received many awards including the National Book Award, the Los Angeles Times Biography prize and an Emmy for public television.

McCullough spoke about how America should draw from the "inexhaustible strength" of the founding fathers of our nation. Josh Sturgis, junior in political science, found him interesting.

"He's a funny guy," Sturgis said. "He provided some good insight and information."

McCullough said that in the early days of our nation, the entire population was equal to the present population of Kansas. He said the colonies claiming independence from the British Empire was incredible. The British Army was larger than the entire population of the largest city, Philadelphia.

"This nation was founded on risks," McCullough said. "We are risk takers. We have always been risk takers."

McCullough spoke about three qualities of our ancestors that Americans should draw upon. First was courage. He spoke of the courage colonists had to fight disease and danger of unsettled country.

"Every one of us is descended from someone of great courage." McCullough said

He also talked about the human qualities of past American leaders, such as George Washington and John

"They weren't gods, they were imperfect human beings," he said. "They made mistakes, and had bad habits. The miracle is that these imperfect beings rose to the occasion and succeeded."

The third point he made was that early Americans were in the pursuit of happiness, and Americans still are today. He defined the pursuit of happiness as the enlargement of the human spirit and the attainment of the good society through the life of the mind

McCullough said that although one was likely to hear that everything has changed since the Sept. 11 attacks. Americans shouldn't accept that statement.

"We are still the largest, freest, strongest, wealthiest, most innovative and most creative country in the world," McCullough said. "We have incredible resources, but our most important one is our brain power."

McCullough praised leaders like President Bush and former New York City mayor Rudy Giuliani. He also praised the younger generations of firefighters and police officers for the work they've done.

"That generation has really showed us, haven't they?" he said.

McCullough finished his speech with encouragement for the days ahead of the United States. He told the audience to think about difficult times the United States had been through and the courage of earlier generations. He said he was certain the United States would get through the events started by the attacks.

"We are stronger since Sept. 11, and we will be stronger still," he said.

Both students and patrons enjoyed McCullough's speech.

"I thought it was fantastic," John Pence, Manhattan resident, said. "He bridged the gap of 225 years ago to

Bush's plan nears $2.12 trillion

BY MARTIN CRUTSINGER

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C.- President Bush is sending Congress a $2.12 trillion spending plan Monday that seeks to recognize the new realities confronting the nation since Sept. 11. It proposes the biggest jump in defense spending in two decades and a record increase in money devoted to making Americans more secure at home

The budget tries to revive an anti-recession stimulus package that stalled late last year in the Senate. It also seeks billions of dollars more in future years to make permanent the biggest economic victory of Bush's first year in office, a sweeping. across-the-board tax cut.

But the spending plan for the 2003 budget year must face the new realities of a reduced financial situation - $4 trillion in disappearing surpluses because of the recession and that tax cut.

To do that, Bush wants to squeeze government programs from highway construction to job training and environmental projects.

Congressional Democrats are pledging a fight to restore spending for their priorities and to oppose tax breaks in Bush's stimulus package for the wealthy and corporations.

"There are a lot of us who question whether or not we really need to have a major stimulus package. Many people think we're coming out of this recession," Sen. Chris Dodd, D-Conn., said Sunday on CNN's "Late Edition."

White House budget director Mitchell Daniels said Bush was prepared to negotiate the elements of a stimulus package and the overall budget as long as it did not compromise his top goals.

"There's certainly no give in terms of doing what it takes to safeguard America and to win the war against terror," Daniels said on "Fox News Sunday." "These are sort of non-negotiable items ... and the president's going to do what it

In the message to accompany his budget. Bush said his spending plan "recognizes the new realities confronting our nation. ... It is a plan to fight a war we did not seek, but a war we are determined to win."

Bush's budget asks Congress to increase defense spending to $379 billion in 2003. That is an increase of $48 billion, or 14.5 percent, making it the biggest one-year jump in defense since 1982 under Reagan.

Overall, according to documents obtained by The Associated Press. the president's 2003 budget seeks to spend $2.12 trillion for the 2003 budget year beginning Oct. 1 - a 3.4 percent increase from projected spending this year of $2.05 trillion.

The 2002 budget represents the first time government outlays will top the $2 trillion mark. That milestone is occurring just 15 years after the government recorded its first $1 trillion budget in 1987.

This year's budget represents a 10.2 percent jump in overall spending from 2001. To restrain spending to a proposed 3.4 percent increase next year while still boosting defense and security. Bush is asking Congress to cut a number of popular programs.

Those reductions include trimming $9 billion from highway programs, cuts to a popular youth job training program and a freeze on new water projects built by the Army Corps of Engineers.

America needs defense system for protection

ou've got no reason to buy one. It will cost too much. It won't work like it should. If you get one, everyone else will want one too. No, these aren't the pleas of your parents trying to talk you out of a used car. These are the arguments against President Bush's withdrawal from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

The news media has yet to explain the need for a limited missile defense system, so I will try.

The Central Intelligence Agency predicts that by 2015 the United States will face ICBM threats from North Korea, Iran and possibly from Iraq.

All three of these nations are actively acquiring chemical, biological and nuclear weapons.

Meaning, in 13 years terrorist nations will have the technological capacity to murder millions, all within a touch of a

This is bad.

Granted, such a system will cost a great deal to start and maintain. However, the Armed Forces commits itself to a policy of anticipation. Taxpayers now spend billions of dollars to upkeep a large naval fleet to protect American children against...pirates?

Frankly, there is no naval threat to the United States, but we chose to prepare for the circumstances if they should occur. Such is the case with missile defense. Freedom is never on the clearance rack ladies and gentleman, so pay up when the hat comes to you.

The most curious critics are those who claim it is scientifically impossible for a missile to intercept another missile. Personally, I have more faith in American ingenuity in the application of science, or as I like to call it, engineering.

These were the same group of critics who said that the Panama Canal is an impossible feat, that America never will land on the moon, and that a cola can taste good but only have one calorie. Well, two out of three isn't bad.

nuclear exchange will never occur because they assume by launching a missile, they should expect one in return, and the result would be suicide. However, in a post- Sept. 11,

Many people feel that a

American foreign policy, we must not make the assumption that only nation-states possess weapons of destruction.

For example, if a small group of French ultra-nationals forcibly seize control of a missile base and fire on America, do we as human beings possess the gall to return the favor and murder millions of innocent French persons?

OK, France is a bad example. On the other hand, we are too moral of a country to vaporize entire nations in response to a group of small fanatics. Although no one doubts that Operation Enduring Freedom took civilian casualties, we chose not to turn Afghanistan into a giant parking lot.

Besides, even if we did turn Afghanistan into a giant parking lot, K-State would quickly purchase the land and make the freshmen park there. To conclude my point, the best defense is not a good offense, but a good defense in this scenario, The largest share of critics claim this move is out of American insecurity, and will trigger an arms race in Asia. To the predicted arms race, I see it as one of the larger disadvantages to the plan. To the issue of insecurity, I have only this: If it was not for American insecurity, we would never have stolen the Great West from the Native Americans, overtaken the beautiful archipelago of Hawaii, and most importantly. America would not have breast implants.

Implementing a national missile defense system benefits national security by protecting American cities from destruction.

Therefore, we can spend less time worrying about what Saddam Hussein is plotting against us, and concentrate on more important things - like pirates.

The national missile defense system proposed this presidential term hopes to develop technology capable of intercepting incoming nuclear missiles from the sky. As practical as this might sound, Bush's plan is a novel idea at best, and very dangerous. After withdrawing from the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty in December, many of the first world countries mentioned above condemned the United States for unnecessarily wounding hope for continued peace. The implementation of the defense system, however, fires a warning shot at the other nuclear powers that the United States is not playing by the established rules anymore.

What happens when nuclear powers begin to feel threatened?

An arms race, and history shows this leads the world down a dark, ugly path.

Second, we do not possess the technology to defend against an air attack. Javed Ali, an expert in the analysis of weapons of mass destruction, is quick to point out that "the technological development of such a system is years, if not decades, away."

If we put all our eggs in the national missile defense basket, terrorists will have a decades-wide window to attack.

Despite these forewarnings, the Bush administration continues to tout the program while shying away from its enormous price tag. President Bush conservatively sets the cost of research and development at

KSU elected student officers receive compensation, perks

BY SARAH RICE

Kansas State Callegian

Serving as a student body president might look great on a résumé, but that isn't the only perk of being an elected official.

Kyle Barker, student body president, receives a $2,230 scholarship and receives the same amount in salary.

In addition, he also has the opportunity to attend bowl games and meet distinguished guests of K-State.

Bill Muir, assistant to the vicepresident for institutional advancement, serves on the joint committee on officers' compensation, which recently approved a plan for officer compensation that will last for the next three years.

"We try and split it up between scholarship and compensation," Muir said. "That seems to be a real workable situation."

In addition to the president, six other officers receive scholarships. The vice-president is awarded $3,065 a year, the student senate chairman receives $3,345, the attorney general $2,787, and the vice-chairman, allocations committee chair and privilege fee committee chair all receive $1,500 for the year.

The money is budgeted in the Office of Student Activities and Services every three years and includes a 4-percent inflation rate.

Muir said the amounts are based on a survey of other institutions in the conference.

"Student officers have been receiving compensation of various amounts and sizes for about 20 years," he said. "We try and do a study of peer institutions."

Barker said there are other perks that just come with the job, such as sitting on stage at Landon Lectures and being on the Alumni Board of Muir said compensation is important in order to allow every student the opportunity to run for office.

"If we didn't have some type of way of compensating, we might not get the person who needs to work at another job to make ends meet," he

"They couldn't afford this. It makes sure everyone has the chance to become officers, but that they get some kind of reward in serving in those positions."

Barker said he also thinks compensation is important since the position is like a job.

"It's a job," he said. "We're there basically eight to five."

At other universities around the country, there is a wide range of compensation and extra perks for serving in top positions.

Justin Mills, University of Kansas student body president, said there is not that much money available for compensation. The student body president receives in-state tuition; however, Mills is from Kansas, so there is not an advantage for him.

He is paid $450 a month, which comes out to $6.15 an hour.

Mills also has the opportunity to purchase a gold parking pass, which is usually only available to administration and some faculty.

Mills said he appreciates the compensation, but doesn't feel that he needs anything more.

"I am not really a huge fan of perks," he said. "I am a public servant."

At Oregon State University, Student Body President Justin Geddes is one of the highest paid student officers in the country.

He receives $12,000 a year, an allcampus parking pass, tickets to athletic games and a skybox at football games.

The vice-president receives $9,000 a year, the executive staff gets $520 per month and nine taskforce members are paid $280 per month.

Geddes said he couldn't have run for office if the compensation wasn't available.

"There is no way I could do this well and have another job," he said.

However, at the University of Michigan, Student Body President Matt Nolan receives no compensation or scholarships.

"I get a parking pass," Nolan said.
"I am one of the only student body presidents at a large university that doesn't receive compensation."

Nolan said he wouldn't have been able to take the job if he had needed a part-time job to pay for tuition.

Mills said the perks of being a president shouldn't be money or parking passes, but the experiences.

"I got to go to Israel with a group of students. I get to meet Danny Glover," he said. "Those are the perks that aren't paid, but the fun

Mercy reveals part of expansion

BYTARA PATTY

Kansas State Collegian

Mercy Health Center on College Avenue revealed its new Intensive Care Unit and emergency rooms in an open house Saturday.

These rooms, which will be available to patients this March, are part of phase one of Mercy's expansion project.

"The ICU is probably one of the finest in the country at this time," Richard Allen, president and CEO of Mercy Health Center, said.

Staff will be trained on the new equipment and get certified to use it before the ICU is open to patients, April Hamilton, community relations and planning coordinator for the hospital, said.

Phase one of the expansion project included the addition of ICU rooms and a remodeled emergency room. The development also features an isolation room, a quiet room and new waiting rooms.

The isolation room is connected to

The isolation room is connected to a room in the ICU through two separate doors, Hamilton said. A doctor or nurse enters a small room through one door and then enters the patient's room through another door in the room.

She said this process keeps the number of germs in and out of the patient's room at a minimum. The quiet room provides a soothing area for loved ones to be alone or meet with doctors, she said.

Jim Murguia, chief operating officer of Mercy Health Care, said facilities prior to the new addition have been at capacity, while admissions into the hospital have been going up, creating the need for expansion. The existing ICU rooms were built in the 1960s and are small, Murguia said.

With technology today, he said, Mercy needed more room for equipment.

"The rooms should meet the health care needs for the next 20 to 30 years," he said.

The rooms utilize every corner of space, Hamilton said. Cabinets in the rooms extend to the ceiling, and mini nurses stations are set up outside the rooms in a fashion that allows nurses to monitor two patients simultaneously.

Glass panes between rooms and a movable monitor also help nurses to take care of a pair of patients concurrently, she said.

Eventually, a courtyard will be constructed outside the building providing a healing view for patients, Hamilton added. Mercy plans to seek advice from K-State on how to construct the courtyard, she said.

Murguia said that in addition to better care for patients, the expansion will play a vital part in trying to bring new doctors into the community and recruit health care professionals.

recruit health care professionals.

All phases of the expansion are funded by the hospital, Hamilton said, although a capital campaign is underway to raise additional funds for other improvements.

Allen said if not enough money is raised, these improvements will not take place.

"We have currently raised 3.4 million — 7.3 million is our ultimate goal," he said.

The expansion might also serve to regain the trust of the community, he said.

"Health care has not been focused on community to the extent it needed to be with the financial pressures of the last 10 years," he said. "We must engage the community a lot more."

Allen said that during the last several years, hospitals have lost confidence nationally. Now, hospitals like Mercy Health Center are taking steps to regain trust 100 percent, he "Charitable care increased at an incredible rate," he said. "Last year, Mercy gave away $1.5 million in free health care, and we should be."

TWICE IS NICE

K-State's Pervis Pasco (44) puts up a shot over Oklahoma State's Andre Williams, right, during the second half Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats knocked off No. 9 Oklahoma State 70-61.

Wildcats beat No. 9 Cowboys; earn 2nd upset win in 4 days

Kansas State Collegian

Maybe K-State's win over Texas on Jan. 30 wasn't a fluke.

The Wildcats (9-10, 3-5), shooting a blistering 54-percent from the field, pulled their second upset in four days, downing No. 9 Oklahoma State (17-5, 4-5) 70-61 before 8,393 at Bramlage Coliseum.

And it wasn't that close.

K-State led by double figures all but 22 seconds of the second half, and was on top by 18 with a minute to play before the Cowboys ended the game on a 9-0 run.

It was the Cats' first win over a top 10 opponent since Jan. 17, 1994, when Coach Dana Altman's club shocked then-No. 1 Kansas 68-64 at Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence.

"It's a marquee win for these kids," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "We beat a great team, and I think as important as that is, the most important thing is how they did it."

K-State's defense held Oklahoma State to 39 percent shooting from the floor, including just 32-percent in the first half. The purple also forced 17 turnovers, and limited the Pokes to 6-of-26 from three-point range.

"I told the guys that just because we beat Texas, that doesn't make our season," said point guard Larry Reid, who led all scorers with 18 points. "We've got to keep on fighting, and we came out and did that."

They did it from the start, too.

With more than 35 K-State letterwinners on hand, the Cats opened the game on a 10-2 run, holding the Cowboys scoreless for the first 2:30. Center Pervis Pasco, whose father, Pervis Sr., was in attendance for the first time this season, scored eight of those points, including two big dunks.

"His dad came up for the game, and we thought since his dad was here, he was trying to show off or do something," forward Matt Siebrandt said of Pasco. "But he played really well. He sparked us at the beginning, had some monster dunks in there and got the crowd into it."

Oklahoma State would pull within three at 14-11, but that's when Reid took over.

In just one minute and four seconds, the senior drilled a three-pointer, picked up a steal and took it the other way for a lay-up, stole the ball again, and fed Pasco for a transi-

"When that happened, that kind of gave us the momentum and built some confidence for our players," Reid said. "It just built confidence that we can win, that we can beat this team. And from there on out, I think that's how we played the whole game."

That pushed the lead to 10, and Siebrandt followed with a three-point play to cap a 10-0 run. K-State also used an 8-2 run to end the half, taking a 36-21 advantage into the locker

Oklahoma State cut it to nine on two occasions in the second half, but never got closer. The Cowboys' leading scorer, Maurice Baker, finished with 16 points, but was benchridden for seven and a half minutes of the final period with four personal fouls.

Siebrandt and Pasco both finished with 15 points apiece for K-State, while Gilson DeJesus added eight off the bench. The Cats also shot 80 percent from the free-throw line, connecting on 20-of-25 attempts.

"We wanted it pretty bad," Siebrandt said. "I think we felt inside we could beat them, and we came out and played so well together that we didn't leave anything to question."

It was especially satisfying for Reid, a native of Midwest City, Okla.

"This kid went down to Oklahoma State last year, and really had a difficult time," Wooldridge said of Reid, who shot 2-for-10 and committed seven turnovers in last season's 62-57 loss.

That's his home state, and I thought it was a big win for him, personally, I know we always talk about our team being the most important thing, but for Larry Reid, that meant a lot to him.

"He'll never forget that win, I promise you, and I just want to let him know that I knew

Intrastate rivalry to continue tonight in front of nationally televised audience

Whenever rival schools hook up to do battle on the hard court, fans get even more geared up to root for their team. The same can be said anytime K-State renews its in-state rivalry with No. 2 Kansas. This time, however, the bill might be a bit more appealing than it has been in years past. The Wildcats (9-10, 3-5) will take on Kansas (19-2, 8-0) tonight at 8 in front of a nationally televised audience, as the ESPN crew will be in town to broadcast the game as part of "Big Monday."

For the Cats, "Big Monday" will complete a big stretch where they have knocked off Big 12 title contenders Texas and Oklahoma State in the span of four days. K-State's win over the No. 9 Cowboys marked the first time since 1994 the Wildcats had beaten a top 10 opponent.

That was when K-State dethroned No. 1 Kansas

"We have a lot of confidence going into this game, especially after coming off two big wins like we have," freshman guard Nick Williams said. "It would be very exciting for this team and this program if we can beat KU at home."

"I never want to mark any particular game on my calendar, but to play against KU on ESPN will be very exciting."

But just as K-State looks to extend its winning streak, the Jayhawks anticipate extending another streak, one that might be bigger to both teams.

Kansas has not lost to the Wildcats since Bramlage Coliseum, sometimes coined Allen Field House West, opened in 1988.

For K-State players and coaches, that streak emerges about this time every year. But this year, it seems to be less of a thought after two big K-State wins.

"We've got to put that out of our mind that they have this streak going against us," senior Larry Reid said. "We can't think about that. Just knowing we can win is all we can think about."

Despite upsetting Texas and Oklahoma State. Coach Jim Wooldridge already seemed to be focusing on Kansas after Saturday's win. He knew the real task was just two days away.

"Their arsenal is so impressive because they come at you from every spot on the floor - there are no weaknesses that you can find with them," Wooldridge said. "You have to think that they are playing the best basketball of their season right now - that makes any league game against them very tough to win." Kansas stands atop the Big 12, riding a six-game winning streak. The Cats have moved out of the cellar and are in the midst of their own two-game revival.

For K-State, confidence has been the buzz word coming into tonight's game with the layhawks.
